EDITOR'S NOTES

By Tim Redmond
> Tredmond@sfbg.com

I was over at the San Francisco Public Defender's office the other day, headed for a press roundtable, and I'd forgotten what room the event was in so I wound up at the reception desk on the second floor. When I arrived, a man was standing at the counter, highly agitated, trying to explain that something was wrong with his case, and that nobody was listening and he was getting the runaround — the kind of scene you see every day at the bottom level of the legal system, where people who don't have money scramble constantly to figure out which end is up.

And on the other side of the counter was a young guy who was calmly collecting the information, analyzing the problem, and explaining exactly what the client needed to do. He sent him a few doors down to another service then said, with a smile: "But don't worry, if they can't help you, just come right back here and we'll get you taken care of." He was the model of what a good public employee ought to be — professional, friendly, polite, smart, and (particularly important in this office) sympathetic.

And as I stepped up to ask him where the

With EFCA finally within reach, Sen. Feinstein has announced that she is looking for a “less divisive” option.

Do the right thing, Dianne

By Robert Haaland
and Rafael Mandelman

OPINION At the end of World War II, approximately 36 percent of American workers belonged to a union. Today that number has shrunk to about 12 percent, lagging behind the world's other industrial democracies. But now, with a Democratic president in office, we have a realistic chance of enacting the most significant piece of labor legislation in decades, the Employee Free Choice Act, which would protect the right of workers to organize into a union.

The opposition, of course, is well organized and well funded. Opponents will spend more than $200 million to defeat the bill in the Senate. They will argue that EFCA is just a special interest bill that helps big labor. But the truth is that the legislation should be part of the long-term economic recovery plan and is key to rebuilding the middle class.

In 1980, average CEO pay was 42 times that of the average blue-collar worker. By 2006, CEO pay had grown to 364 times the average blue collar worker's pay. A survey of median weekly earnings in 2007 revealed that union workers make 30 percent more than their nonunion counterparts, and are 59 percent more likely to have employer-provided health coverage than other workers.

The key EFCA reform, and the one that has generated the most controversy, is called “card-check.” Under EFCA, if the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) finds that a majority of employees have signed written authorization forms designating the union as their collective bargaining representative, the union is certified.

Opponents of card-check often argue, erroneously, that EFCA will deprive workers of their right to a so-called secret ballot. In fact, EFCA preserves both options, but it places the choice in the hands of workers, not employers. Moreover, the history of these “secret ballot” elections shows that they are often anything

MUNI'S BAD TWO-YEAR BUDGET

Another reason a two-year budget cycle is a bad idea (“No balance in two-year budget,” 4/15/09): It allows the powers that be to reduce the visibility of bad budget decisions. Case in point — SFMTA (which runs Muni) now has a two-year budget cycle, courtesy of Proposition A in 2007. When the (unelected) commissioners created their first two-year budget, they sneaked a fare increase in the second year of the budget, an increase most Muni riders are still blissfully ignorant of. In July, the adult Fast Pass goes up $10, to $55 per month. The youth/senior/disabled pass goes up $5 to $15 per month, a 50 percent increase.

Fare strike, anyone?

WHAT'S A GREAT PLACE TO WORK?

A great place to work is one because its workers believe that it is a terrific employer (Editor's notes, 4/15/09). So we have developed a methodology that looks exclusively at the workplace from the employee perspective. (By “we,” I mean my coauthor and fellow journalist Milton Moskowitz and myself, along with the Great Place to Work Institute.) Our primary way of determining the businesses that make our lists is through our employee survey, which is filled out by a random selection of employees at each company. Our survey asks for employees' opinions about whether they trust the management, feel respected and treated fairly, have pride in their work, and feel a sense of camaraderie with other employees.

Because we believe that whether a company is a great place to work can only be answered definitively by those working there, we would reframe question you asked this way: What are the opinions of employees working at a company that is not green (such as an oil company) or a defense contractor

Slow down the solar project

EDITORIAL The concept is so good it's hard to imagine why anyone would criticize it: the San Francisco Public Utilities Commission wants to cover the Sunset Reservoir with solar panels, creating the largest municipal solar generating project in the country. The money would come from existing SFPUC revenue — no new taxpayer dollars. The Sierra Club loves the idea, and Mayor Gavin Newsom is pushing it.

We agree that the reservoir is a perfect place for a solar project, and that the city ought to be pursuing this.

But the structure of the deal makes us uncomfortable — and the financing shows a serious flaw in how federal money for renewable energy is allocated.

Under the terms of the proposal, a private company, Recurrent Energy, would finance and build the plant at a cost of perhaps $40 million. The facility would have the capacity to generate 5 MW of electricity, enough to power 2,500 houses. The city, in turn, would agree to buy that power for the next 25 years, at about 23.5 cents per kilowatt hour — far more than the current market rate for electricity but less than what other cities have agreed to pay for long-term solar contracts.

The city would have an option to buy the plant from Recurrent after seven years for $33 million.

The good news is that this would be a public-power project — the city would own the electricity and could use it to power public buildings and eventually, once the community choice aggregation (CCA) system is running, could sell it as retail power to residents and businesses.

But Sups. Ross Mirkarimi and David Campos have asked the obvious question: Why is a private company even involved? Why can't the city build the solar generating station itself? The CPUC's answer: It's cheaper to let Recurrent do the work — because the private outfit will get a $12 million tax break from the federal government.

That's a serious problem — why is the Obama administration giving tax breaks for private projects that aren't available to cities? “What we should be looking at is why San Francisco, with all its clout in Washington, can't get that same sort of subsidy for a public project,”

Campos told us.

Or as Mirkarimi put it: “This only makes sense to me if there's some guarantee that the city will actually buy the plant in seven years. Otherwise we're going to look back at this in year 15 and realize it's not such a good deal.”

The city's energy future is very much up in the air right now — CCA is on the cusp of viability, there's still an active public-power movement, and it's very hard to say what the city's needs will be (or what the price of solar energy will be) 10 years from now, much less 25. So we're very nervous about signing a contract of that length with a private company.

Yes, the Recurrent deal offers solar now — and that's important. But the supervisors shouldn't rush this through. At the very least, they should pass a resolution asking House Speaker Nancy Pelosi to seek to direct the same subsidies that private companies can get to public solar projects — and to delay a final vote on this until there's a better analysis of why a private company should be given a long-term contract for what ought to be a public project. SFBG press event was, I realized I knew his name. He still looks just like he did when his picture ran on the front page of the Guardian on Sept 3, 2003, the day he was released from prison after serving 13 years for a crime he didn't commit.

John Tennison works for the guy who devoted years to winning his freedom, Public Defender Jeff Adachi, and as far as I can tell, he's a perfect fit for the job. He survived 13 years of hell with no visible bitterness. And he's a reminder, for all those who like to forget, that everyone in prison is not a violent thug — or even guilty.

Coincidentally, if there is such a thing, I had just been working on a story about a move to criminalize cell phones in California prisons. The wardens have gone beyond drugs and weapons; phones are the new contraband. I posted an item on the politics blog about it and got the typical responses: Why should prisoners have access to cell phones? Aren't they supposed to be punished? Give 'em bread and water and that's it.

I get that cell phones can be a safety issue if they're used by gangs and violent criminals to conduct business. But I also get that prisoners (or more truthfully, their families) have to pay exorbitant rates to make collect calls on the pay phones in prisons, and that there is often a wait, and that calls can only be made at certain times.

I'm not going to make cell phones for prisoners the biggest crusade of my life, but you know, a sizable number of the 170,000 California inmates did nothing other than buy and sell drugs that ought to be legal anyway; a fair number did nothing at all and were wrongly convicted; and most of the rest will get out at some point — and the more contact they have with their families (and potential employers), the better and safer we all are.

Something to think about. SFBG

but democratic. Too often employers use their power over unorganized employees to intimidate them into voting against the union. Such documented employer tactics have included mandatory attendance at antiunion meetings, one-on-one meetings, threats to close the business if the union wins the vote, and harassing or even firing workers engaged in organizing activity.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein has an 87 percent lifetime voting record from the AFL-CIO and has co-sponsored EFCA in the past. But now, with EFCA finally within reach, she has announced that she is looking for a "less divisive" option.

Say it isn't so, Senator.

For many years progressive activists have had concerns about Feinstein, even going as far as to seek her censure at a state Democratic convention two years ago. In 2007, the party leadership reminded the activists that although she may stray occasionally, Feinstein is really a good Democrat who shares our basic values and commitments. There was no censure.

But workers' rights is no side-issue in our Democratic Party. Economic justice is the issue. This is a moment of truth for Feinstein — and all of us who are her constituents have an obligation to help her get to the right answer.

On April 28 at 7 p.m. at the LGBT Community Center, the SF Labor Council, Pride at Work, and the Harvey Milk LGBT Democratic Club are sponsoring a community briefing on our campaign to urge Feinstein to support working people. Join us. SFBG or a cigarette maker or an alcohol manufacturer about their workplace? Do they, among other issues, feel proud of telling others in their communities that they work there?

Others do lists of green or socially responsible companies, and we think such lists are valuable. But we believe there is great value in maintaining our focus of evaluating companies strictly from the employee viewpoint. It's a perspective that is rarely heard, even by many who consider themselves progressives.

FACTS YOU Need to Know Before Investing

Recently, the FED embarked on "quantitative easing" by creating a trillion dollars to purchase government debt.
This is an attempt to forestall an economic depression.
However, the actual effect is the reduction of the primary interest rate. How does it effect your investments?

If you have a longterm loan or a mortgage, the liquidation value of these instruments will greatly increase, unless held to maturity. If you want to cash out before the end of your contract, the penalty you will have to pay will make it likely to be unprofitable.

THE SAN FRANCISCO BAY GUARDIAN NEWS + CULTURE

By Steven T. Jones
steve@sfbg.com

Who really cares about an appointment to the Golden Gate Bridge, Highway and Transportation District Board of Directors? There isn't a delicate balance of power on the board or any major initiative at stake in this fairly obscure district. San Francisco certainly has more pressing issues and concerns.

Yet the Board of Supervisors' April 14 vote to reject Larry Mazzola Jr. and select Dave Snyder for that board says more about San Francisco's political dynamics, the state of the American labor movement, the psychological impact of the recession, how the city will grow, and the possibilities and pitfalls facing the board's new progressive majority than any in recent memory.

It was a vote that meant nothing and everything at the same time, a complex and telling story of brinkmanship in which both sides of the progressive movement arguably lost. And it was a vote that came at a time when they need each other more than ever.

"It was a win for the Newsom-oriented elements of labor," Sup. Chris Daly, who helped spark the conflict, told the Guardian.

The bloc of six progressive supervisors who shot down Mazzola — who helps run the powerful plumbers union and was the San Francisco Labor Council's unwavering choice for an appointment that has traditionally been labor's seat on the bridge board — is the same bloc the unions helped elected last year. It is also the same bloc that has been fighting the hardest to minimize budget-related layoffs.

The vote says a tremendous amount about the crucial alliance

Plumbers union boss Larry Mazzola Jr. was the San Francisco Labor Council's pick for a recent political appointment, but the progressives on the Board of Supervisors denied it.

Uncivil union

What the fight over Larry Mazzola says about the progressive and labor movements and their uneasy relationship between progressives and labor, how that delicate partnership formed, and what the future holds.

PLUMBERS VS. PROGRESSIVES

The Mazzola name carries a lot of weight in San Francisco labor circles. The Web site for the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry Local 38 (UA 38) features a photo of U.S.

Secretary of Labor Hilda Solis standing between Larry Mazzola Sr. and Larry Mazzola Jr., the father and son team that runs the union.

But the Mazzolas and their union are also controversial. As the Guardian has reported ("Plumbers gone wild," 2/1/06), the union owns a large share of the Konocti Harbor Resort (which a lawsuit by the Department of Labor said was a misuse of the union's pension funds) and owns the Civic Center Hotel, which tenants and city officials say has been willfully neglected by a union suspected of wanting to bulldoze and develop the site. The plumbers and other members of the building trades have also fought with progressives over development issues and generally back moderate-to-conservative candidates.

Sup. Chris Daly and several progressive groups locked horns with the union over the hotel a few years ago, and Mazzola Sr. responded by opposing Daly's 2006 reelection campaign, targeting him with nasty mailers and donating office space to Daly's opponent, Rob Black. Yet more progressive unions like Service Employees International Union Local 1021, which represents city employees, convinced the Labor Council to back Daly and union support helped Daly win.

So when Mazzola Jr. came before Daly's Rules Committee last month, the supervisor unloaded on him, and Mazzola gave as good as he got, telling Daly he didn't want his support and defiantly telling the committee he didn't know much about the bridge district, or its issues, but he expected the job anyway. Those on all sides of the issue agree it was a disaster.

"He was just patently unqualified for the position," Daly told the Guardian. Mazzola tells us his experience with labor contracts would be an asset for the position, but he admits the committee meeting didn't go well. "I was caught off-guard and put in a defensive mode that altered my planned presentation," Mazzola told us.

Whatever the case, Sup. David Campos joined Daly in keeping the Mazzola nomination stuck in committee while the progressive supervisors privately asked labor leaders to offer another choice. "We said, 'Give us anyone else as long as they can intelligently talk about transportation issues and the bridge district,'" Daly said.

But labor dug in. "It seemed as though the board was trying to dictate to labor what labor should do," Michael Theriault, who heads the San Francisco Building and Construction Trade Council. And the other unions decided to back the trades, for a number of complicated reasons.

"The reason we supported Larry Mazzola is because this was important to the plumbers union," said Mike Casey, president of the Labor Council and head of Unite Here (which includes the Union of Needletrades, Industrial and Textile Employees and the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees International Union). "To the extent we can support the trades, we want to."

So when the four most conservative members of the Board of Supervisors used a parliamentary trick to call the Mazzola nomination up to the full board on April 14, the stage was set for the standoff.

THE STATE OF LABOR

Labor is truly a house divided, despite its universal interest in minimizing recession-related layoffs and taking advantage of a new Congress and White House that is generally supportive of labor's holy grail: the Employee Free Choice Act, which would make it far easier to form unions.

The April 25 founding convention of National Union of Healthcare Workers (NUHW) in San Francisco caps a years-long battle between Sal Rosselli's United Healthcare Workers (UHW) and their SEIU masters (see "Union showdown," 1/28/09). Rosselli and many others say SEIU under Andy Stern has become undemocratic and has climbed in bed with corporate America, while SEIU says getting bigger has made the union better able to advocate for workers. Both accuse the other of being power-hungry and not fighting fair.

"Inside SEIU, we've been struggling for four years basically on a difference of ideology and vision of what the labor movement is," Rosselli told us. David Regan, who SEIU named as a UHW trustee after ousting Rosselli, told us the union divisions have been overstated by the media. "Everyone is together in pushing the Employee Free Choice Act," he said, glossing over the fact that the legislation is in trouble and recently lost the support of U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein.

Nationally, SEIU has been at war with all of the most progressive unions. The union recently made peace with the California Nurses Association after a particularly nasty struggle that involves many of the same dynamics as SEIU vs. NUHW, including accusations by CNA that SEIU was a barrier to achieving single-payer healthcare and was illegally meddling in its internal affairs.

SEIU is also accused of breaking up Unite Here, which fought the most high-profile labor battle here since Newsom became mayor in its contract fight with the big hotel chains. Last month, a large faction from the old Unite affiliated with SEIU, whose officials say they were just helping out after the end of what all knew was a bad marriage. "This is an example of a merger that didn't take," SEIU spokesperson Michelle Ringuette told us. But the building trades have backed Unite Here in its fight against Stern's SEIU. As Casey told us, "We're in a major fight over our right to exist. There's no other way to characterize it."

Yet in San Francisco, SEIU plays a different role. Local 1021 is the advocate for the little guy, representing front-line city workers who deliver social and public health services. It is the union facing the deepest layoffs in the coming city budget fight and is still negotiating contract givebacks with the Mayor's Office. The union's biggest allies in City Hall are the exact same six supervisors who voted against Mazzola.

So why this standoff? SEIU, Unite Here, and other progressive unions share the Labor Council with the building trades, which are traditionally more conservative and friendly with downtown and, these days, starting to really get desperate for work. "We have thousands of guys on the verge of losing their homes and families," Theriault said. "We are desperate."

That was one reason the San Francisco Labor Council last year cut a deal with Lennar Corporation to back Proposition G, which lets Lennar develop more than 10,000 homes in the southeast sector of the city. Daly, who wanted firmer guarantees of more affordable housing, was livid over the deal and has been at odds with the council ever since. But Daly said labor's undercutting of progressives goes back even further and includes the early reelection endorsement Rosselli's UHW gave Newsom in 2007, which helped keep big-name local progressives out of the race.

Tenants groups, affordable housing advocates, and alternative transportation supporters form the backbone of progressive politics, but on development projects, they often clash with the trade unionists who

"Inside SEIU, we've been struggling for four years basically on a difference of ideology and vision of what the labor movement is."

Sal Rosselli, head of National Union of Healthcare Workers

just want work. And labor expects support from the progressive supervisors. As Mazzola pointed out, "It was labor that got most of those guys elected."

But labor has its own fights on the horizon. SEIU fears deep city job cuts if the Mayor's Office can't be persuaded to start supporting new revenue measures. NUHW is getting challenged by SEIU for every member the try to sign up. And Unite Here's hotel contracts start expiring in six months, reopening its battle with downtown hotel managers.

"We're going to be in a real war with some of those employers," Casey said. Yet he said it's actually good time for the otherwise distracting fights with SEIU over how nice to play with big corporations. "I embrace this fight because I think this is exactly the struggle we need to have in the labor movement."

But the Mazzola fight was one that neither side relished.

TO THE BRINK

The Board of Supervisors chambers was filled with union members flying their colors on April 14, but the progressive supervisors were just as unified, voting 6-5 to reject Mazzola. All that was left was the political posturing, the decision of what to do next, and the fallout.

"I am disappointed and surprised by the board's action," Sup. Sean Elsbernd (who voted for Mazzola and publicly called it "a sin" to deny him) told us, refusing to confirm the private joy over the outcome that many sources say he has expressed. "What shocked me is a majority of the board turned their back on labor."

Daly admits that the standoff hurt progressives. "I'm not sure who came up with it, but it's certainly true that the Sean Elsbernds of the world were able to take full advantage of the situation to drive a wedge between unions and progressives," Daly said.

Fun under siege

Nightlife and street parties in San Francisco face official crackdowns — again

By Steven T. Jones and Marke B. Jones
news@sfbg.com

As San Francisco's party season gets underway — a time when just about every weekend includes street fairs and festivals, venerable celebrations like Bay to Breakers, quirky cultural events such as a flash mobs, promoter-created club nights, and underground parties designed to raise funds for Burning Man camps and other endeavors — police and other party-poopers keep finding new ways to crack down on the fun.

The latest: potentially fatal price gouging of the How Weird Street Faire, a series of bizarre police raids on underground clubs, and state alcohol officials threatening to yank local club licenses.

For years, the Guardian has been warning that NIMBY neighbors, intolerant enforcers, and indifferent city officials were threatening the vibrant social events that make San Francisco such a fun and unique city (see "Death of fun," 5/23/06, "Death of fun, the sequel," 4/25/07, and regular recent posts on the SFBG Politics blog).

Lately the situation has gotten so bad that even the conservative San Francisco Examiner has written about the problem ("Squeezing the fun out of festivals," 4/13/09) and followed it up with an editorial calling for city officials to address the issue and ensure that the cultural events can keep happening.

Overwhelming public opposition to recently proposed restrictions on the May 17 Bay to Breakers and April 12 Bring Your Own Big Wheel events led City Hall to pressure the San Francisco Police Department into reversing promises of a crack-down, although many events are being threatened.

The How Weird Street Faire is scheduled for May 10, although organizers say they can't come up with the nearly $10,000 the San Francisco Police Department is demanding by May 1. Organizer Brad Olsen sought help from City Hall (Sup. Ross Mirkarimi and senior mayoral aide Mike Farrah — who helped save BYOBW — have both tried to intervene, so far to no avail) and unearthed city codes that seem to cap police fees for events like How Weird at $5,494, but the cops haven't budged.

"Although we appreciate your position, it would be unwise for the SFPD to risk public money by not collecting the required fees prior to the event. If the event is the only way your group is able to pay for police services, we are all betting that the event will be as successful as you hope," SFPD Lt. Nicole Greely wrote to How Weird promoters on April 13, suggesting that organizers take out a loan to pay the escalating protection money demanded by SFPD.

But Olsen said his grassroots group, which barely breaks even on the event, has never in its 10-year history been required to pay in advance and told us that entrance donations at the event are the only real source of revenue for the popular dance party.

Meanwhile the Guardian has heard multiple reports of undercover cops infiltrating underground parties in SoMa in the early morning hours of April 11 and 12, followed up by groups of more than a dozen uniformed officers storming in and roughly making arrests for resisting arrest, illegal alcohol sales, and drug possession.

"All of a sudden an undercover cop just tackled someone on the dance floor," 27-year-old San Francisco resident Ryan Parkhurst told us, describing the scene at one party. "Then at that point, more than 10 officers came upstairs ... I asked an officer, 'What's going on?' and he said, 'Arrest this guy.'"

Parkhurst said four cops then jumped on him, roughed him up, and arrested him. "Another guy was beat up worse than I was, with severe bruises and scratches all over his face."

Parkhurst said he was charged with being drunk in public, resisting arrest, and assaulting an officer, but when he went to court on April 13, he was told all charges had been dropped.

SFPD spokesperson Sgt. Lyn Tomioka spent several days trying to gather information on the raids, but had little to offer by Guardian press time. "I can't give you the answers you're looking for based on what the computer is telling me," she said. The District Attorney's Office also did not respond by press time.

The attention that the California Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control (ABC) is paying to licensed venues seems to have ratcheted up lately as well. DNA Lounge, a nightlife haunt for freaks of all stripes, was cited by ABC in February for operating "a disorderly house injurious to the public welfare and morals" after undercover agents for the department witnessed brief instances of nudity and simulated intercourse during the DNA's popular regular queer parties Cream and Escandalo.

These instances occurred during go-go and stage routines, mostly involving flashing buttocks and a wet T-shirt contest. In a statement on the DNA Lounge Web site, www.dnalounge.com, DNA owner Jamie Zawinski contends that ABC is retaliating against his club for appealing the department's decision not to grant DNA a conversion of its license from a Type 48 (21-and-over bar) to a Type 47 (all-ages venue that serves food). During the appeal process, a settlement was reached, and the DNA successfully converted its license.

"As a direct result of our having filed an appeal, ABC began sending undercover agents into the club during our gay and lesbian promotions looking for dirt," Zawinski writes, drawing attention to the specific targeting of DNA's queer nights, a particular that inflamed the gay community when a story about it was published in the Bay Area Reporter.

It is the specific requirement that all-ages venues collect 50 percent or more of their revenue from food sales that has gotten several other San Francisco clubs in trouble with ABC. The state requires that venues possessing a Type 47 ("bona fide eating place") license, a requirement for most all-ages clubs, earn just as much revenue from food sales as liquor sales. That's particularly daunting for businesses that have traditionally made most of their money at the bar.

"There is grave concern and fear," San Francisco Entertainment Commissioner Terrence Alan told the Guardian, "that the recent conflicting and oftentimes underground regulations [of ABC] could undermine the great and ongoing work of the Entertainment Commission and Sup. Ross Mirkarimi's proposed cultural legislation."

Alan was referring to the "Promoting and Sustaining Music and Culture in San Francisco" charter amendment sponsored by Mirkarimi that would "produce a master plan and vision that promotes a sustainable environment for music, culture, and entertainment throughout the city."

It appears the law enforcement types are doing everything possible to make sure Mirkarimi's vision never becomes reality. SFBG

Unions CONT.

Yet Daly noted how ridiculous is was for Sups. Elsbernd and Michela Alioto-Pier to be publicly professing such fealty to labor while opposing revenue measures that would minimize layoffs. "At the same time the plumbers were attacking me, I was sponsoring paid sick days," Daly said. "It's the six members of the board that are the most pro-labor who voted against Larry Mazzola."

Politically, Elsbernd says the progressives misplaced their hand. "I think the easy middle ground for them was to reject Mazzola and send it back to committee," Elsbernd said. Others echoed that point. Instead, supervisors appointed Synder, a widely acclaimed transportation expert who created the modern San Francisco Bicycle Coalition then started

Transportation for a Livable City (now Livable City) before becoming the first transportation policy director for the San Francisco Planning and Urban Research Association (SPUR).

"I don't like how that went down, and I'm not happy with the inability of the board and labor to come to an agreement," Synder told us. "I was stuck in the middle. I wish they had sent someone the board could have agreed to."

After the vote, Synder went back to the SPUR office and resigned. SPUR director Gabriel Metcalf admits that labor leaders lobbied him to pressure Synder to withdraw his name, and that he asked Synder to do so. But Metcalf said he didn't want to lose Synder, whose vast knowledge of transportation issues has been a real asset to SPUR. "It was his choice and not my preference."

"This issue is not why I left SPUR, but it was the precipitating event," said Snyder, whose progressive values have occasionally differed from SPUR's stands. "My sense of social justice has more to do with class issues than I was able to pursue at SPUR."

In fact, the clashes between progressives and developers (who are often backed by the trade unions) often revolve around how much affordable housing and community benefits will be required with each project approval. Synder said the defining question is, "How do we accommodate development in San Francisco and maintain progressive values in a capitalist economy?"

He didn't answer that question, but it is one the building trades also understand. Theriault said he supports holding developers to high standards, even when progressives have block certain projects to get them. "I'm okay with that as long as I see the endgame," Theriault said.

He expects the progressive board to listen to labor more than Daly or Democratic Party chair Aaron Peskin, who Theriault said helped shore up the progressive opposition to Mazzola (which Peskin denies). "With the exception of Daly, the relationships are repairable. But they have to show some independence from Daly and Peskin," Theriault said. "The real fear for me is what comes next."

Theriault was referring to things like new historic preservation standards that supervisors will soon consider, as well as the string of big development projects coming forward this year. And for progressives, they hope their efforts to save city jobs will be followed by labor support for progressive candidates for the Board of Supervisors (such as Debra Walker and Rafael Mandelman) in next year's election.

"The one thing I know about labor is, we've been screwed by politicians on the left and the right," Casey said. "Are we angry about this and disappointed? Yes. But does that mean the alliance between labor and progressives is dead? No. We're going to work through this stuff, talk, take deep breaths, and move forward." SFBG

GREEN CITY When U.S.

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar looked out at a sea of faces during a San Francisco public hearing April 16, a band of activists dressed as polar bears, sea turtles, and other marine creatures stood out from the rest. Their message, also articulated by a host of federal and state-elected officials, was unequivocally clear: no new oil and gas drilling off the California coast.

Waving a thick document in the air, Salazar explained that he'd inherited a five-year plan from the Bush administration to award new leases for oil and gas drilling in the federally controlled outer continental shelf, which comprises some 1.7 billion underwater acres off the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the Gulf of Mexico, and Alaska.

Rather than move the policy as planned, Salazar extended public comment for six months, met with stakeholders in each region, and placed greater emphasis on developing offshore renewable energy. The San Francisco public hearing was the last in a series of four that Salazar attended.

"One of the significant issues that is so important to President Obama is that we move forward with a new energy frontier," Salazar said. He advocated embracing offshore wind and other renewable alternatives as part of a "comprehensive energy plan going forward." Yet Salazar also indicated that future plans for the nation's energy mix were "not to the exclusion of oil and gas," and mentioned that opportunities for "clean coal" technology should also be considered.

Under the five-year plan, three new leases are proposed off California's coast — two in the south, and one in the Point Arena Basin, an underwater swath near Fort Bragg. Elected officials unanimously opposed any new offshore petroleum development. "Our state clearly is saying to you today, no," declared Sen. Barbara Boxer, chair of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. "Instead of putting our California coast and economy in jeopardy, we need to look at ... green technology which will bring us new jobs."

Lt. Gov. John Garamendi sounded a similar note, saying the billions that would be invested in offshore oil could be put toward advancing clean energy. Rep. Lynn Woolsey (D-Petaluma) highlighted the risk of oil spills around the Point Arena Basin. "It could be turned from a wellspring of life into a death plume," she said. "This shimmering band of coast must be protected."

While nearly every testimony blasted new offshore oil development, the conversation brightened when Salazar asked for comments on renewable energy. According to estimates by the National Renewable Energy Laboratory, offshore wind in shallow areas could provide some 20 percent of the electricity needs of coastal states nationwide. Wave energy, while still under study, might one day generate enough electricity to power some 197 million homes per year, according to Department of the Interior estimates.

Most of the oil that could be extracted from the outer continental shelf would come from the Gulf of Mexico and Alaska, with some 10 billion barrels potentially available off the Pacific coast. Joe Sparano of the Western States Petroleum Association said offshore drilling could create jobs and limit dependence on foreign oil. Yet Boxer pointed out that, based on Energy Information Administration figures, drilling for oil across all areas would yield just 1 percent of the nation's total oil consumption by 2030 — and it's not believed to make a real difference in gas prices.

Richard Charter, government relations consultant with Defenders of Wildlife, seemed confident that California's coast would be protected. "You have a new interior secretary for an administration that received California electoral votes ... in a state that is pretty much single-minded in its position in terms of saving the coast," he said.

Charter's optimism was helped by a recent federal appeals court ruling against the previous administration's plan to award new offshore-drilling leases in the Arctic.

So now, "whatever Secretary Salazar does will have his own stamp on it," Charter said. "In each of these hearings, it's become apparent that the Obama administration may be coming around to a new approach."

Public comment for the offshore leasing plan ends in late September. Salazar told reporters that he expects a decision by the end of the year. SFBG

Stones Throw Tour

Hip-hop would be sadder, more corporate, and just plain corny without Stones Throw. Since the mid-1990s, the California label has ushered in innovative street sounds from the likes of Dudley Perkins, Madlib, Madvillian, Quasimoto, J Dilla, the Beat Konducta, and Jaylib. The fact that I've mentioned only four artists is testament to the twisted genius of Stones Throw owner Peanut Butter Wolf. The impresario, whose gub'ment is Chris Manak, continues his crusade against same-old-same with the synth- and bass-driven vibe of Los Angeles' "Ambassador of Boogie Funk" dâm-funk, the eerie narco rhythm and blues of Mayer Hawthorne, and the polyester anarcho-disco of James Pants. Comix for Comics

Cartoon Art Museum is hosting its fifth annual "Comix for Comics," a fannish affair that includes stand-up comedy by Reno 911!'s Carlos Alazraqui and others. The event is lovingly organized by the museum's curators, Andrew Farago and his wife Shaenon Garrity, aficionados of Watchmen and Japan's Studio Ghibli — the famed animation studio whose revered director, Hayao Miyazaki, the duo jetted over to visit recently. In addition to gourmet snacks and drinks (let's hear it for PopChips), partygoers can bid on original comic strip art from local and national cartoonists like Dan Piraro (Bizarro) and Lynn Johnston (For Better or For Worse). With the Bay Area premiere of S.O.S., BAG continues its scathing yet gleeful assault on consumerism, spectacle, and the whole fat trauma of late-late capitalism. cross between masked Mexican wrestling (lucha libre) and burlesque (va-va-va-voom). In the tradition of El Santo and Mil Mascaras, it presents high-flying masked midgets, voluptuous women, and the type of grudges that must be settled in the squared circle. Cultures collide under one roof as hipsters, beer, Mexicans, and geeks enjoy the colorful spectacle that has become a So-Cal staple for the past seven years. I even heard Robin Williams was sighted heckling in the audience at the last SF show. Performance art or "sports entertainment"? I'm not really sure. Rubies and "Danielle Rubi: Invisible Thread"

Both Sorcerer and Rubies descend from erstwhile local favorites Call and Response; in their new incarnations they are waging a gentle war for the creamiest electronic swirls this side of Norway. The Rubies template is more song-oriented, with Simone Rubi and Terri Lowenthal wrapping honeyed voices in delightful harmony. Though savants of the mellow — tropicalia, 1970s studio production, easy-going funk, and all genres cosmic are touchstone sounds — their mood is buoyant and given to dancing. Put another way, Rubies sounds like SF's most perfect weather. How perfect to see them surfside: they play Mollusk for the opening of Danielle Rubi's Rolleiflex show, "Invisible Thread." Can you say fancy schmancy?

This year's San Francisco Decorator Showcase takes place in a turn-of-the-century Georgian mansion, a grand ol' multistory affair with white trim, manicured green hedges, and a wrap-around rooftop terrace. Close to three dozen local architects and designers are participating. Their contributions range from commonplace cubbyhole makeovers to spiffy deluxe suites. From a strange definition of jazz and funk greats to an upcoming project interpreting songs by Nico, Throbbing Gristle (left, in 1978; right, in 2006) have gone through many changes, but stayed together partly by keeping apart. Genesis P-Orridge and friends have lengthy and strong ties to the Bay Area, where their sold-out appearance this week has even kickstarted a mini-festival of events.

At the desert shore

Throbbing Gristle returns to destroy the universe

By Brandon Bussolini
a&eletters@sfbg.com

At some point between the group's termination in 1981 and re-formation in 2004, Throbbing Gristle entered the canon. The more Throbbing Gristle music you've heard, and the more you've read about it, the less likely that conversion will seem. Matmos' Drew Daniels acknowledged as much in his contribution to Continuum's 33 1/3 series on classic albums, an exegesis of the band's most accessible statement, the puzzling 20 Jazz Funk Greats (Industrial Records, 1979). The group's relationship with music-as-such was perverse enough to make contemporaries like the Sex Pistols look like Chuck Berry revivalists. Back in the saddle after nearly a quarter-century, Throbbing Gristle mark two has less in common with the noise pranksters of old than the divergent, innovative projects the group has splintered into: spokes(wo)man and singer Genesis P-Orridge's Burroughsian reengineering of rock's DNA with Psychic TV; synth whiz Peter "Sleazy" Christopherson's protean electronic voyages with Coil; and the rain-slick, dark disco of Cosey Fanni Tutti and Chris Carter's Carter Tutti project all figure in the group's latest recording, the appropriately bizarre Part Two: The Endless Not (Mute, 2007).

P-Orridge, the most visible and outspoken member, is seductively articulate about the band's intentions: they have little to do with making music that plays into the pleasure of listening, and much to do with music's mainline connection to culture. For all of Throbbing Gristle's touted firsts, its music often verges on indecipherable. None of the group's gritty, lo-fi recordings evoke emotions beyond a vague, lingering unease. But, the achievements: Throbbing Gristle literally invented modern industrial music with the founding of its so-named label, members Carter and Sleazy are credited with developing an early keyboard-triggered sampler, Tutti's "Hot on the Heels of Love" was a prime inspiration for first-wave Detroit techno, and "(We Hate You) Little Girls" predates Whitehouse's power electronics and the whole harsh-noise underground long since percolating in the U.S. and Japan. And so on.

The weird thing about such innovations is that those committed to establishing Throbbing Gristle's major authorship risk freezing and trapping these self-appointed culture-creeps within one historical moment or another. Despite all the collateral riding on Throbbing Gristle's "seminal" place in the last half-decade of musical and cultural history, the band's deliberate failure

THROBBING GRISTLE VS. MACHINE SEX: THE INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION OF SAN FRANCISCO

Though San Francisco might be eternally hampered by the stereotyped perception of a hippie wonderland replete with flowery hair, free love, and fluffy puppies, in reality, SF has long been as much a haven for radical dystopians as it is for their wistfully upbeat foils. From robot circuses to urban exploration to electric sheep, San Franciscans have a demonstrated predilection for the bionic, the blighted, and the bizarre. Add in a penchant for situational absurdism and a fervent appreciation for electronic music predating the Summer of Love, and it becomes clear why San Francisco was ground zero for the first wave of North American industrial noise music, and the city with the strongest connection to its European progenitors — Throbbing Gristle.

Throbbing Gristle is, in every sense of the word, the seminal industrial band, whose confrontational performance tactics, nihilistic lyrics, and audio sampling techniques foreshadowed acts as divergent as Skinny Puppy, Negativland, and 2 Live Crew, despite their repeated assertions that they were not really meant to be a band at all. "Assuming that we had no basic interest in making records, no basic interest in music per se, it's pretty weird to think we've released something like ten albums ... that have had an effect on the popular music scene forever." So declared Throbbing Gristle's Genesis P-Orridge in the Industrial Culture Handbook, first published in 1983. Beginning their Bay Area association in 1976 through correspondence with Oakland-based shock artist Monte Cazazza — who traveled to England to assist with their nascent Industrial Records project and coined their company slogan: "industrial music for industrial people" — Throbbing Gristle's aural extremism was also painstakingly documented by local champion of the underground V. Vale, first through fifth issue of the publication of RE/Search, and then through Industrial Culture Handbook.

It wasn't just the Dada-esque, cut-up compositions of Throbbing Gristle and Bay Area-based industrial noise-peers like Boyd Rice and Z'ev that gained an early foothold in the collective consciousness of the SF underground. Survival Research Laboratories, founded in 1978 by Mark Pauline, gave mecha-fetishism a physical expression — with installations of and performances by a bevy of robotic entities, often decorated with animal carcasses for ultimate shock value. SRL's first public event, Machine Sex, featuring dead pigeons on a conveyor belt trundling toward a rotating blade, debuted on St. Patrick's Day 30 years ago. Not long after, Vale introduced Pauline to Monte Cazazza, who became one of SRL's early collaborators — and the bridge between the musical and mechanical arms of industrial culture.

Industrial music, permanently positioned outside the mainstream by design, has long struggled for recognition in the U.S. But early industrial's lasting influence on the Bay Area arts is readily apparent in the confrontational panhandling robots of the Omnicircus, the large-scale mechanical sculptures of the Flaming Lotus Girls, the electro-noise/"weirdcore" performances of the Katabatik Collective, the flesh-eating fantasia of industrial music club MEAT, and even in the Mad Max-ian flamethrowing antics and electronica oases found at Burning Man and live looping sensations such as Kid Beyond and Loop!Station. Considered in that vein, you could say a little bit of Throbbing Gristle resides in us all. Chew on it. (Nicole Gluckstern)

BUBBLEGUM MUSIC IS THE NAKED TRUTH

DIRECTED BY KIER LA JANISSE

On April 30th, we will be screening for the first time in the city

From the Archies to Britney Spears, bubblegum music has excited every generation of music lovers. Featuring interviews with many of the genre's major creators, this ambitious anthology dismantles the worst myths about how bubblegum is produced and identifies the gum tendencies of artists as various as the Sex Pistols, Abba, the Monkees, and the Ramones. The film reveals the light and dark sides of the music, telling bitter tales of ingenious back-stabbing, pistol-wielding producers, and the perversities behind the jingles.

to be just that — a band — in any conventional sense needs to be acknowledged, partly as a tactical gambit. If Throbbing Gristle is a band more talked about than listened to, it seems inconsequential. Individually and collectively, they were prescient enough to choose culture as their medium, and music as a tool for scrambling it. It's a foresight that has been borne out by MTV and then the Internet, but the tricky thing is that Throbbing Gristle's actual accomplishment — the meaning behind what it does — isn't in music itself, but in culture. That's a zone where significance tends to be more protean; we can't simply rely on albums as self-contained, coherent statements that we can either identify with or reject. There's something trickier going on here, as if Throbbing Gristle's music is meant to be heard at the second or third degree, when everything's been attenuated.

The Throbbing Gristle project grew out of COUM Transmissions, a sort of umbrella term for performances and art projects that had strong affinities with the extreme performance artists known as the Vienna Aktionists, William Burroughs, and occultist Aleister Crowley. Their best-known installation, "Pornography," in a gallery within spitting distance of Buckingham Palace, most notably exhibited images of Cooney from various British porn magazines. It was a publicly-funded blight whose purpose was, in part, to convert sensationalist press into a feedback loop worth contemplating: the group framed and mounted outraged press clippings, and when newspapers published articles about this détournement, framed those as well. This press-driven mise-en-abyme probably offers the best example of how to listen to TG. The band plumbed new depths with feedback and delay, but their raison d'être was, beyond electronic trickery, setting up circular cultural patterns that explode hypocrisy. In doing so, the creative forces within Throbbing Gristle afford themselves the freedom to play any villainous or anti-heroic role handed to them. SF86

SONIC REDUCER Now playing:

Locals Only II. You can't stop it from happening, even if you crumble to the ground like Keanu, fire your pistol in the air, and scream, "Nooo!" NorCal bands gotta make some noise, Bay-bies.

Hey, what gives? The Fresh and Onlys promised to release their self-titled Castle Face debut in May, yet last week I spied the CD, prominently displayed, twinkling brightly on an Amoeba Music end-cap. Could it be an inside job, being that Fresh and Onlys Tim Cohen and Shayde Sartin have passed through the store's payroll? Whatever, Kev, be happy it's there, polishing off rough gems like "Endless Love": "Why don't we live forever / inside this little mirror / so that your eyes and my nose / and your ears and my mouth / and your chin and my beard / they all fit together? / Na-na-na-na-na-na!"

Just as you turn to dismiss "Endless Love" as another joke song — albeit one tuned to a sticky channel of surf and '60s-style garage rock by way of Flying Nun novitiates and Jonathan Richman's post-punk pop naifs — the group unleashes a mini-nugget of "A Man Needs a Maid" wisdom: "Don't you know you gotta give yourself / to get somebody else." Happily tucked into an echo chamber of passion-first rock 'n' roll, and armed against the apocalypse with a here-to-help sincerity that could stand the test of time ("The Mind Is Happy," "Feelings in My Heart"), the Fresh and Onlys pull off the seemingly impossible: discovering a clunky sweetness and lo-fi grace in a very singular rock primitivo.

"Snap back like a bungee chord — Lord!" Watch yourself, Raw Deluxe. The Bay Area group's flow is as satisfyingly smooth and substantive as classic Del tha Funkee Homosapien times three on "Can You Spend It," off its new Raw Communication (Reel Deal). MCs Lexxx Luthor and Mic Blake of Alphabet Soup and Squalati of Felonious are unstoppable and at the top of a mix that showcases the sheer delight of word-slingers riding the exact same wavelength. There's nothing particularly uncooked about the smokily intoxicating old-school jazz-funk gumbo on Raw Deluxe's third long-player: keyboardist Matt Fleming, saxophonist Tony Jurado, bassist Christ Arenas, and drummer Chris Spano are on point on "Something to Build Upon" — a celebration of the band's actual music-making process — which would chart in a better world and provide the foundation for a more maximalist hip-hop.

On the post-rock-cum-math side of the spectrum is the far-too-scarce From Monuments to Masses, now SF-NYC bicoastal and back with a new mostly instrumental full-length, On Little Known Frequencies (Dim Mak), possibly the most powerful recording yet by Francis Choung, Matthew Solberg, and Sergio Robledo-Maderazo. Mars Volta and Minus the Bear — MTB keyboardist Matt Bayles coproduced, engineered, and mixed the disc — are obvious referents, though neither band finds its voice via fragments of sampled dialogue like FMTM does, as if tapping directly into the culture's transmissions. Almost monochromatic in its clear-eyed devotion to alt-rock propulsion, FMTM's music has the closed-circle urgency and internal fury of a sonic dialectic. Are these frequencies to be plumbed with increased frequency? SFBG

Sat. April 25, 8:15pm
Gospel Night with FRET NOT
& Rev. ROLAND POLLARD & Friends

A special evening that promises to "raise the roof!" Lead by Lori Arthur's intense and fiery singing, Fret Not plays old-time, boot-stomping, roots gospel with songs from the traditions of America's white and black rural churches, backed by acoustic fiddle, bass, guitar and banjo.

Rev. Roland Pollard started his career performing with Sister Sledge, the Barkays and the Jackson Five. Backed by keyboards, bass and drums, he and the choir play an urban, lull-till, funky, black gospel, with a heavy emphasis on the great voices in the choir.

This will be an unforgettable evening for those who want to clap, stand up and holler, as well as those who just want to listen and soak it all in. $15adv/$17door

Energy 92.7 and AT&T are Honoring The People Of The Bay Who Raise The Bar In The Community.

Joseph is being recognized as an AT&T community hero because of his work and efforts in supporting the San Francisco AIDS Foundation. From April 2005 to August 2007 Joseph participated in six marathon training programs with the AIDS Marathon, with five of those as a volunteer or as a trainer for new participants.

He most recently participated in the 2008 AIDS Life Cycle and has agreed to be a training ride leader in the 2009 event. Joseph is dedicated to fighting the war on AIDS and is a constant motivator for everyone he speaks to. Joseph Pulice is this week's AT&T Spotlight Community Hero and that's why AT&T is donating $500 to the non-profit organization of his choice.

AT&T supports community based programs and organizations that address educational, cultural, and social issues affecting the quality of life in our communities. Energy 92.7 and AT&T - helping to raise the bar in our community.

MUSIC

Grass Widow

PREVIEW Grass Widow's harmonious post-punk tension is fostered below SF street level, in a former meat locker containing, among other things, a very charming quilt with the band's name patched into it. In anticipation of an impending record release, I met there with bass player Hannah Lew and drummer Lillian Maring (guitarist and trumpet player Raven Mahon was overseas), who, although living far apart — Maring is on the East Coast at present — were clearly very happy to be together.

"It's not like there are any dispensable characters," explains Lew. After the dissolution of Shitstorm, Lew's former band with Mahon, the two started playing together in 2007 with Maring, who was in the city for the summer from Washington state. Though Maring went back up north for a bit, she says she quickly returned and the trio "got really serious" — serious enough to tour the U.S. the following summer after cranking out a wonderful demo CD-R/ cassette that makes up most of their upcoming self-titled 12-inch on the local Make a Mess label.

Grass Widow artfully molds anxiety, love, and sturdy musicianship into a mesmerizing shape — a sound in which haunted beauty is tempered alternately by pain and, as Lew puts it, "the cathartic experience of playing the song itself." The group's three-part harmonies are intricate, with an incidental, spoken quality. Imagine a darker shade of the Raincoats, with minimal, vocal harmony-centric arrangements — really terrific stuff.

A seven-inch EP is projected for summer release through Cape Shok, and Grass Widow has been making short films, some of which will be screened at the record release show. "So much of it is about survival and friendship that we're not gonna quit," Maring said. "It's a reason to live." (Michael Harkin)

Jimmy Sweetwater Presents

» PREVIEW In the era of Slow Food in the City of Fog, I wonder why more people don't slow down for a second and get out to taste some local music. Think about the last time you were willing to fork over more than a fiver for some local talent. Seriously. San Franciscans sometimes seem fonder and more aware of what the Bay Area attracts than of what it produces. Jimmy Sweetwater is out to change that. Sweetwater is the rare breed of promoter who is also a musician — he plays a mean harmonica and a dirty washboard. He has been giving his all to keep his series of local music going in a town drawn to touring bands. Sweetwater, a historian of Mission District music from the past 20 years, has put on five shows at the Great American Music Hall, four at Slim's, and one at Café du Nord. According to Sweetwater, club staff has largely been supportive, but it's a struggle to fill venues in these times of financial woe. "There's a ton of local talent that never gets to play the big clubs," he says, noting that he tries "to combine different kinds of music in one night." All-local nights and combinations of different genres — these aren't traditional strategies, but the Bay Area is the perfect place to unleash them.

This weekend sees a diverse Jimmy Sweetwater Presents lineup at the Red Devil Lounge, including the high-speed-Calexico-like Diego's Umbrella, honkeytonkers 77 El Deora, the East Bay's Ben Benkert, and the Mission Three, a group including Sweetwater that will play a number of tunes by the Band, even one of my favorite (and rarer) Band joints, "Acadian Driftwood." Sweetwater always seems to be doing a thousand things at once. It's all for the love of song in this songlike town. (Ari Messer)

“Punks and Poets: SF Subculture in the '70s”

» PREVIEW Let's get punk-rock and have a slideshow, everybody! While Green Day not-so-secretly toils along its dejected piano-ballad path to Broadway, it's the perfect time for a bracing reminder of what actual punk in the Bay looked like, circa the late-1970s. You know, way before the final episode of Seinfeld. Zing!

Photographer Michael Jang — whose wry '60s home shots of his Chinese American family, collected as “The Jangs” and shown at University High School last year, opened a revelatory window into a 30-plus year career — was up front and snapping when turbulent San Francisco groups like the Mutants, Avengers, and Dils exploded onto the scene. You haven't seen so many skinny ripped jeans, torn Patti Smith tees, untamed hairdos, and askew lapel pins since your last trip to the backroom of Adobe Books.

At Pirate Cat Café, Jang will be projecting prime pics of the above legends in action (and meltdown), interspersed with images of outré icons like William S. Burroughs, Ishmael Reed, Michael McClure, and others to conjure up that rough-and-tumble period a couple decades ago when writers and musicians chose in-your-face tactics over Facebook updates. (The pictures from the slideshow will remain on display in the café until May 22.) Jang will also crack open his vault and treat us to some of his coveted Sex Pistols hangover shots, taken the morning after Winterland, a.k.a. “the day punk died.” He'll be joined by veteran journo Jack Boulware — who is working on an oral history of SF punk — and special guests to discuss the images on Pirate Cat Radio, 87.9, FM. “I may even project the slides on a sheet,” Jang tells us. “How punk is that?” (Marke B.)

Audacious Artefacts: Parisian Grand Guignol Hypnodrome, 575 10th St.; 1-800-838-3006. www.brownpapertickets.com. $15-69. Thurs-Sat, 8pm, through May 2. Fri-Sat, 8pm, May 2-16. Over the years the Thrillpeddlers have dabbled in the diabolic on many levels — from the creepy sci-fi inspired vignette A Slight Tingling to the elementally claustrophobic terror of Orgy in the Lighthouse. This spring's lineup of old Parisian Grand Guignol goodies gleefully exploits an array of human phobias old and new: from dikephobia (fear of justice) to bdellophobia (fear of leeches) to a perhaps hitherto undiscovered phobia, the fear of lewd shadow puppetry. The Thrillpeddlers have always delighted in exploring the uncomfortable, the unconventional, and the flat-out impossible, alternating as tradition demands between tales of terror and comic sex farces, and this year they get down and dirty as prostitutes, lecherous country gentry, amoral jungle guides, and naughty nuns slink and prance across the stage in various states of undress and unprincipled behavior. In Tics, a hysterically-paced evening of wife-swapping between expansively sleazy Oocteur Martin (Eric Tyson Wertz) and his high-strung dinner guest Monsieur de Merliot (TJ Buswell) results in a veritable onslaught of unfortunate physical reactions, while the cruel fate which befalls impossibly perky radiesthesiologist Eveline Ricard (Maria Leigh) in the 1958 adventure thriller The Head Hunters hearkens back to the titillating exploitation plots found in vintage men's magazines. The night ends with an erotic take on the Thrillpeddlers patented spookshow which honestly provokes more laughs than shrieks (or moans), but hey, laughter is sexy tool! (Gluckstern)

Thurs/23-Sat/25, 8pm; Sun/26, 2pm. Is there such a thing as follies de grandeur? With implicit debt to Beach Blanket only wetter, this high-energy but wearisome revue from John Bisceglie (creator of the San Jose Follies) purports to take us back, with comic and musical flair, to the good ol' days of San Francisco. More likely than not, you'll count those days as any preceding curtain time. True, the young ensemble cast has enthusiasm to spare and bright costumes to boot (minus a recurring "naked" prospector in a beige thong), even if the singing and acting chops are unevenly distributed. The greater problem remains the writing, which seems unsure whether to aim at tourists or locals with its rarely very funny in-jokes, and song-wise goes from respectable to blah lyrical overlays of classic pop fare. The humor, inconsistent at best, also gets downright uncomfortable in its playfully off-color but also off-the-mark ribbing in the direction of Indian genocides or gay cooties. Jacinta Vlach/Liberation Dance Theater

PREVIEW Choreographer-dancer Jacinta Vlach grew up and trained in San Francisco, and her commitment to what she calls "my home" runs deep. What turned her into an arts activist, however, is that "the people I grew up with are not represented in Bay Area dance." Having gone through the city's public school system, she considers herself part of the hip-hop generation and has always been immersed in world music and culture. Although of mixed Latina-caucasian background, she has most identified with the country's African American heritage. It led her to train at the Ailey School and perform for two years with one of the oldest African American dance companies, Philadanco, in Philadelphia. Locally she has been a member of Robert Moses' Kin and Savage Jazz Dance Company. But she credits Detroit-born New York City choreographer Nathan Trice as the man who most shaped her outlook on dance. Like Vlach, Trice says he wants to "create community-based initiatives to reflect current and historical social climates of gender, culture, and identity." So upon settling back into her hometown, in 2007 she founded Liberation Dance Theater, a collective of seven dancer-choreographers who share her vision of dance as a way to explore personal values in the face of the overwhelming odds created by unequal power relationships. Their first work, Abjection in America (2007), a work that "examines what we don't like about ourselves," gained the young company an invitation to this year's prestigious Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Massachusetts. Vlach also received a three-year residency at ODC Theater, where this week the dancers are putting the finishing touches on the hour-long Animal Farm, which will travel with them to Jacob's Pillow in August. late Harold Pinter penned this still fragrant, hilarious, and terrifically creepy vision of the family hearth—in this case a household of grown men, topped by wobbling patriarch Max, an angry, aging, time-killing, and vicious old butcher (dexterously and definitively embodied by an excellent Graham Cowley). Max comes surrounded by twisted son Lenny (Nick Russell) in jacket and tie, dog-simple boxer son Joey (Conor Hamill), and gentle, tightly composed brother Sam (Randy Hurst), a chauffeur. Late one night, prodigal PhD Teddy (Yusef Lambert) slips in the old key and enters his boyhood house after six years self-imposed exile at some American university, bringing with him wife Ruth (a wonderfully far-away yet steely Sylvia Kratins), her chilly discomfort in the testosterone-laden air all but obvious—though as the reunion takes its darkly bizarre course into depravity, Ruth soon proves as much an alpha as any male in the room. Solidly cast and expertly directed by Joyce Henderson, Off Broadway West's intimate season opener is a modestly sized powerhouse, doing justice memorably to this one-of-a-kind family feeding frenzy. The Love Song of J. Robert Oppenheimer Custom Made Theatre Company, 965 Mission; 1-800-838-3006. $15-25. Wed/22-Sat/25, 8pm. After a light but firm hand on Albee's A Delicate Balance, Custom Made Theatre fumbles this one, dropping a bomb about the A Bomb with director Brian Katz's Bay Area premiere of Carson Kreitzer's 2003 play. Winner of several awards, although it's difficult to understand why in this garish and flat-footed production, The Love Song of J. Robert Oppenheimer rehearses (and borrows many a line from) the well-known story of the making of the world's first atomic weapon at Los Alamos under the all-too-Faustian figure of the titular physicist (played by Ian Walker), who ends up on the outs with the McCarthy-era government he so dutifully toadied to during the war. Kreitzer's take includes a Biblically loaded subplot about marriage and infidelity whose feminist overtones partly manifest over the stage, on an unglamorous scaffold gracelessly negotiated by the snake-like figure of Lilith (Jessica Jade Rudholm, garbed artlessly in dark tatters and face paint). Kreitzer also overlays seemingly resonant bits from T.S. Eliot's Prufrock poem, although this marriage too feels overly forced and doomed to a short half life—unlike the play itself, whose cheap moralism and strained, empty thematizing drone on for two radioactive acts. of Bay Area playwright Brian Thorstenson's drama set in a nameless but familiar-looking war-torn land under a fledgling police state. Above the chaos engulfing the city below, two grown sisters reunite briefly in their parents' old lake cottage where Jo (Lauri Smith) fled years before and tends to refugees crossing over the mountain, and where Hannah (Anne Oarragh) stops after fleeing the totalitarian authorities who have already banned her poetry. Another pair, meanwhile, two bureaucratic henchmen of the state (Jeffrey Adams and Michael Heriford) and childhood friends, process files and bodies in a house of detention, where soon novice Lenny (Heriford) will develop a fateful bond with the incarcerated Hannah. The play sets several complimentary themes in motion—including the sibling's pen-versus-gun tension and the sympathetic power of art to bridge even the greatest political, ideological gulfs—buttressed by affecting music courtesy of composer-actor Meklit Hadero. But even as the initial mist hovering over the stage slowly dissipates and characters and story emerge, the themes remain unsatisfyingly developed despite solid efforts by director Raelle Myrick-Hodges and cast. Instead, they wander in a mist of their own, just short of meaningful impact, never quite hitting home. (Avila)

Will Eno's Thom Pain (based on nothing) is an aggressively funny, coolly insouciant piece of theater terrorism now up in a laser-focused, captivating production from Cutting Ball Theater. Bay Area audiences were introduced to Eno's blazing wit and word play last year in Berkeley Rep's local premiere of Tragedy: A Tragedy, but Thom Pain, a tortuous and wonderfully hostile-hospitable monologue, achieves a kind of ideal setting and performance in this intimate production executed to the hilt by a very impressive Jonathan Bock, under admirable direction by Marissa Wolf. (Avila)

War Music American Conservatory Theater, 415 Geary; 749-2228. $14-71. Wed/22-Sat/25, 8pm (also Sat/25-Sun/26, 2pm). ACT and director-adaptor Lillian Groag's ambitious world premiere brings English poet Christopher Logue's monumental rewriting of the Iliad to the stage in a meditation on the capriciousness and depthless tragedy of war that, need I say, remains ever timely here at the end of time. But the admirable project attains mixed results, partly as a result of what comes across as its own mixed feelings about how best to present the subject matter: The declarative presentation of the play's action and themes (forcefully delivered by Anthony Fusco as Homer, among other characters) marches not always comfortably beside the choreography of strife and order (courtesy of Daniel Pelzig); the contemporary-flavorings in the melodrama unfolding between Achilles (Jud Williford), Patroclus (Christopher Tocco), Agamemnon (Lee Ernst), Helen (René Augesen), et al.; and a smattering of winking but flat music hall humor (reminiscent of Mary Zimmerman's laugh-mongering approach to the classics). It can feel more like fishing than a purposeful architecture of fragmentation. While the more intimate exchanges can glide the moral and mortal weight of war over the stage effectively, often the human scale seems ironically unable to bear the magnitude of historical and cultural meaning that should hang majestically but lightly over the proceedings like the great shifting orb in Daniel Ostling's fine, amphitheatre-invoking set. (Avila)

Wicked Orpheum Theatre, 1182 Market; 512-7770, www.shnsf.com. $25-99. Tues-Sat, 8pm; Sat-Sun, Wed/22, April 29, May 6 and 13, and June 24, 2pm; May 24, 31 and June 7, 14, and 21, 7:30pm. Through June 27. Assuming you don't mind the music, which is too TV-theme-sounding in general for me, or the rather gaudy décor, spectacle rules the stage as ever, supported by sharp performances from a winning cast. (Avila)

Wormhole Socha Café, 3235 Mission; www.crowdedfire.org. Free. Sat/25, 8pm. A pleasant room in a pleasant café: an expectant audience sits in ringed chairs facing each other and speakers hover along the periphery. When the lights go out there is a sound like that of someone restlessly tapping on the side of their plate with a fork, then in sudden profusion we get the sounds of rushing traffic, a Spanish-language pop song, a abrupt and jarring car crash, disembodied voices swirling in the aftermath, and emergency sirens in the distance, getting closer. Welcome to Wormhole, the latest experiment in sensory theatrics helmed by Playwright/Director Marilee Talkington, presented by Crowded Fire as part of their on-going Matchbox Productions development series. This 45-minute soundplay takes place entirely in the dark, as a nameless woman (played by Mollena Williams), makes her way through the first stages of her afterlife, by sifting through remnants of the past. Guided along by a savvy spirit (played by an anonymous company member of Crowded Fire), she encounters the memories of childhood tribulations, passive-aggressive relationships, and finally to those of the wreck, all her actions "fleshed out" by the multi-dimensional soundscape provided by Jacopo De Nicola. While the script itself lacks a certain amount of punch, its radio-play presentation does raise interesting questions about the nature of theatricality, both with and without lights. (Gluckstern)

DANCE

"Cubacari Festival of Dance and Music" Dance Mission Theater, 3316 24th St; 826-4441, www.dancemission.com. Fri-Sat, 8pm; Sun, 2 and 7pm, through May 2. May 3, 7pm. $12-22. You expect heat to emanate from the stage of a CubaCaribe Festival, but on the first of this year's three-weekend run, the packed Mission Dance Theater generated plenty of calor of its own. It must be gratifying to be showered with the kind of enthusiastic support that the audience rained on both the local artists and the visitors from San Diego Omo Aché and former Bay Area resident Silfredo La O. Some of the beautifully costumed Folkloric dances looked like teasers—tapas instead of a whole meal—but the evening also included an increasingly boisterous Maypole dance and a rousing chocolate dance, performed in wooden sandals. But the hottest items were the contemporary ones, Ramon Ramos Alayo's improvisation with bassist Jeff Chambers, "Moving Measures", and his stunning male duet, "Wrong Way" with La O. With their version of Cuban pop Las Que Son, an all woman ensemble, added their own version of hot dancing. This coming weekend the line-up expands from the Cuba to include group from the Americas—Peru, Mexico, Haiti—and contemporary dance—Hip Hop, Jazz. (Felciano) SFBG

EVENTS

San Francisco International Beer Festival

EVENT It's Beer Fest time again, which means those lucky enough to have scored tickets to the always sold-out event are prepping their drinking pants for three hours of madness — and those who'll miss the affair are prepping to, well, drip tears into their (non-festival-acquired) beers. We can't blame their lachrymosity. The festival features more than 300 varieties from a mind-boggling number of breweries and brewpubs, from locals like Anchor Steam to internationals like Guinness. Then there are the hard ciders and nonalcoholic options. Oh, and the food from the city's best restaurants. And a commemorative stein to use for tasting and then take home. It's enough to make a beer fan weep like the condensation on an ice-cold pilsner glass.

We're sorry to say there's not much we can do for the people who don't already have tickets — but we can recommend ways to ease the pain. How about staging your own tasting? Pick up a variety of ales, lagers, pilsners, and more from the dizzying selections at City Beer Store (1186 Folsom, SF, 415-503-1033, www.citybeerstore.com), Healthy Spirits (2299 15th St., SF, 415-255-0610, healthy-spirits.blogspot.com), or New Star-Ell Liquor (501 Divisadero, SF, 415-567-7900). Or let the experts choose unusual, exciting Belgian varieties for you at La Trappe (800 Greenwich, SF, 415-440-8727, www.latrappecafe.com), Monk's Kettle (3141 16th St., SF, 415-865-9523, www.monkskettle.com), or the Trappist (460 Eighth St., SF, 510-238-8900, www.thetrappist.com). Granted, these options aren't the Beer Fest, but they're all pretty fantastic as alternatives go. And remember, there's always next year. (Molly Freedenberg)

Jazzzeria

By Paul Reidinger
 paulr@sfbg.com

What do pizza and jazz have in common? Why, two z's, of course — the pair of identical twins that also appears in such exciting words as nozzle, nizzle, pizzle, pazzo, and cazzo. Put these all together and shout them from the rooftops and you'll have quite a riff, if not quite a jazz riff. For music, play ZZ Top. Then run from the obscenity police.

Other than that, pizza and jazz go together like ... well, they don't actually go together. There is no connection I know of. Nonetheless, our drastically refurbished jazz district, along Fillmore south of Geary, now has a creditable pizzeria to go along with the fancier places across the street, Yoshi's and 1300 Fillmore. The pizzeria is called Bruno's and, in a most un-Italian development, is unrelated to the Mission District old-timer of the same name. Old Bruno's has had enough facelifts to rival Phyllis Diller. New Bruno's, on the other hand, is new — with freshly painted reddish-brown walls, nicely upholstered booths, a gleaming bar against a far wall, a showy kitchen, and jazz memorabilia everywhere, the walls laden with portraits and plaques.

In Europe, jazz has long appealed to the French more than the Italians, but Bruno's, despite these musical festoonings, is Italian to its core, right down to the patrone, Claudius Oliveira (owner of several other Italian restaurants in northern California, many in the East Bay) who circulates through the dining room, shaking hands and checking, and the service staff with their winsome accents. The cultural flavor is very much that of Little Italy, and part of its beguiling spell is to intensify the experience of the food.

Pizzerias aren't generally known for their grace notes, but Bruno's offers several. To begin, there's the basket of marvelous garlic bread, which is not only flavorful but of a brioche-like tenderness and plumpness. Tasty bread so often exacts a steep price in crustiness and toughness, but not this stuff. Even if you couldn't eat it, you'd be happy enough just feeling it with your fingers. But you will eat it, and then they bring you more, along with an amuse-bouche — a little ramekin of roasted red pepper soup, say, with a broad hint of cayenne kick. One is typically afforded this type of treatment only when ordering seven-course tasting menus at much starchier places.

Given the slight sports-bar aura,

it isn't surprising to find that the list of appetizers includes buffalo wings ("Texas style"), along with a parade of goodies from the deep fryer, among them calamari and zucchini sticks. But a better choice might be the drunken prawns ($10.95), spiked with tequila.

There is both an Aloha and a Hawaii 5.0 pizza, both with pineapple. Fruit (tomatoes excepted) does not belong on pizza, but pepperoni does, sausage does, salami too, and you'll get all that and more with the signature Bruno's special ($14.99 for a 14-incher), along with bell peppers, onions, mushroom slices, and a sprightly tomato sauce.

Most noticeable is the crust, which bucks the current trend toward thinness and crispiness: It's big, puffy, and breadly in true old-school California style. Although I prefer thinner crusts for a variety of reasons — a thin crust doesn't distract from the toppings but does provide a discreet, pleasurable crackle — there is a case to be made for the more billowy kind. Such a crust does make any pizza look bigger and so, perhaps, enhances one's perception of value, no small matter in shrinking times.

A nice bonus: if you show up in a ZipCar, you get 10 percent off. And ZipCar has only one Z! SFAG

Tending the brood

By L.E. Leone

CHEAP EATS The young couple next door to me in Rockridge is building a chicken coop, and I love them for this. They aren't married and don't have kids, which makes me just want to squeeze them and look at them, and invite them over for every single thing I eat, even oatmeal.

But that would be creepy, so instead I offer to bring them some straw. Do they need a feeder? A waterer? I still have my place in the woods. I have rat traps, chicken wire, and rusting 55-gallon drums that would look real nice against the falling-down barnlike outbuilding on the edge of their lot.

Together, I think, we can shake up this neighborhood. In just a couple months here I have made more friends (or at any rate met more people I want to be friends with) than I did in five years living in Occidental. In five years in Occidental, I made four friends. Two couples. One I actually met in San Francisco, and the other through a mutual friend in Oakland.

Don't get me wrong, I love the woods, or I wouldn't still keep my shack, which I go to when I can for writing and/or romance, and sort of sublet to my artsy bohemian city peeps for same.

The family I work for in East Oakland, Boink's family, they have a chicken. Used to have three, but two died, and the one that's left has gone bad. Her name is Cakey. She's brooding, which means she's set her mind, and ass, on hatching eggs that no amount of setting will ever induce to hatch. Save maybe a visit from Gabriel.

This is actually a dangerous condition for a roosterless hen to be in, because she might get over it, and she might not. I have girlfriends like this.

It falls on me, while Boink's family is away in Florida for the week, to traumatize their chicken. I'm surprised Boink hasn't already achieved this, by accident, but the best way to get a broody hen to snap out of it is to harass the hell out of her.

So I'm going to East Oakland in a moment, I'm stuffing Cakey into a cardboard box with holes poked into it, for air, and I'm driving her out to the country. To the woods. To my shack. Where I can annoy her for three days with sticks, Pere Ubu records, and buckets of cold water — and no one will hear all the squawking. I tried this once with one of my girlfriends and got arrested.

I love Pere Ubu, by the way. But chickens ... and perhaps all poultry, for all I know — their capacity to withstand '70s-era punk rock starts and ends with the Ramones. So you know.

But speaking of traumatized girlfriends, my friend Alice Shaw, after whom I named my great car, Alice Shaw, was mugged at gunpoint in the Mission District. As if I weren't already mad enough at muggers for stabbing a friend of a friend in Seattle!

And do you know what Alice Shaw said to us, over deep-fried hamburgers after a soccer game? She said, Well, in a way it was nice to be noticed, for a change. I'm paraphrasing.

It is comments like this that make me love human beings even more than chickens. I mean, to be fair, we have no exact translation for the could-be clucks-of-wisdom that chickens call to each other from the jaws of foxes, but it's a safe bet they are not so laced with humor and sadness as, for example, Alice Shaw's odd comment.

I wanted to squeeze her and feed her oatmeal, but we were already eating fried hamburgers. Outside, and over rice, with fried eggs on top, and smothered in gravy. What could be better, after a soccer game? It's a Hawaiian thing, called loco moco, and in fact it was invented 60 years ago, according to the menu, in honor of a barefoot Hawaiian football team called the Wreckers.

Whose players apparently liked to eat, because I, at my hungriest, couldn't clean half my plate, or even imagine ever being hungry again, so I brought the rest to Earl Butter. We all agreed: Really really dong-dong-dicky-do great, in a school lunchy kind of way.

You want to know where, don't you? SFBG

Kimjongilia — titled after a type of begonia cultivated in honor of you-know-who — takes a devastating peek behind North Korea's closed borders, while Sacred Places (top right) and Z32 (bottom right) offer structurally adventurous spins on the documentary genre.

SFIFF rides again

In early April, a long-range rocket blasted off from deepest, darkest North Korea; according to a Reuters.com news report, the communist country claimed that its satellite was “launched into orbit and [is now] circling the Earth transmitting revolutionary songs.” Um, yeah. Most folks say the rocket failed — and that its real purpose was to test North Korea’s dropping-warheads-on-our-enemies capabilities. Recent rumors of ill health aside, North Korea’s Kim Jong-il appeared shortly after the incident to mark his re-election as the chairman of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea’s National Defense Commission.

As scary as it is to imagine the pompadored, isolationist “Great Leader” with his mitts on nukes, to focus on North Korea’s threat to the outside world takes away from the atrocities committed within its borders, against its own citizens.

As NC Heikin’s quietly terrifying Kimjongilia reveals, the dictator’s country is a cruel, brutal place. The doc features interviews with North Korean refugees whose tales of escape are as harrowing as their recollections of life back home — a place where simply listening to music from a capitalist country or dropping a newspaper with a photograph of Kim on the floor were infractions that could mean imprisonment for three generations of a single family. Starvation, torture, and constant fear factor into nearly every story; families are separated, and even those who escape struggle, such as a woman whose “freedom” in China translated into years of sex slavery. For these people, WMDs are the least of their concerns.

Peering beyond what’s obvious is a theme at the 52nd San Francisco International Film Festival, with a slate that’s particularly doc-heavy. For every gesture that’s a little debatable (you can spin that Francis Ford Coppola directing award however you want, but Apocalypse Now came out in 1979, and 2007’s Youth Without Youth sucked), there are many that deserves high praise: groundbreaking local documentarian Lourdes Portillo receiving the Golden Gate Persistence of Vision Award, for example. Read on for the Guardian’s coverage of this year’s fest, and keep watching the skies. SFBG

SFIFF’s unconventional docs

By Max Goldberg

Michael Moore may have paved the way for documentary gold, but the most structurally adventurous, ethically demanding nonfictions still reside on the festival block, where they frequently outshine their fictional counterparts for formal rigor and breadth of imagination. If the 2009 SFIFF field doesn’t have a marquee attraction like Standard Operating Procedure, all the better — a year later, I still haven’t lost the bad taste of Errol Morris’s hi-def moral confusion.

A corrective to Standard’s self-serving auteurism might be gleaned from Avi Mograbi’s Z32. In this case the troubling testimony belongs to an Israeli soldier who participated in a senseless revenge killing of Palestinian innocents, but Mograbi handcrafts the layers of remorse that elude Morris’s smug “interrotron.” We never see the ex-soldier’s face, though the digital application of masks produces an uncanny effect in tune with the film’s sliding scale of memory and performance, responsibility and displacement. Mograbi’s willingness to bring the war home (much of the film is set in his living room) is unusual for an investigative reporter, but then most investigative reporters do not narrate their mediating role in song.

Cameroonian-French filmmaker Jean-Marie Teno’s documentary Sacred Places seems more conventional in its blend of interview and ethnographic reflections, but the calm manner in which ideas flow from these encounters makes for a first-rate essay-film. Set in a poor district of Ouagadougou, the capital of Burkina Faso, Sacred Places centers on two eloquent men: Jules Cesar Bamouni, a djembe maker who makes some of the same linkages between film and the traditional storytelling forms that first incited griot-auteurs like Ousmane Sembène; and Nanema Boubacar, a hopeful entrepreneur who runs a neighborhood film club. The scenes in which Boubacar rifles through DVD deliveries offer an overlapping portrait of community-oriented cinephilia (“When there are spots on the DVD, it’s not good for the film fans”) and the vicissitudes of distribution (even in Burkina Faso,

Unhappily ever after

The fest's fractured (and freaky, and feminist) fantasies

By Kimberly Chun
a&cletters@sfbg.com

We're living in topsy-turvy, fairy tale times: the mighty have fallen, and the once-marginalized have risen. We're painting the White House black, while Wall Street high-fliers are hitting the skids and the once-mocked scientists who cried "global warming" are embraced by Main and K streets. A hardscrabble era calls for equally toughened-up tales that provide moral instruction and plunge into the heart of the narrative's contradictions. Do, er, grittily realistic flicks like Dante Lam's ADD-paced HK cop thriller Beast Stalker (2008), which skirt the periphery of lost-innocent yarns, count? The filmmaker's empathy for his monstrously disfigured villain is unparalleled in both the Brothers Grimm and Charles Perrault.

The former receives a clever tweak with Pil-Sung Yim's Hansel and Gretel (2007), in which the youthful inmates take over the gingerbread-house asylum. Unwilling to face the fact he's about to become a father, half-grown man-boy Eun-Soo (Jeong-myeong Cheon) flips his car on a lonely stretch of forest freeway where he's found by a sweet little girl, Soojong (Yeong-Nam Jang). She wordlessly leads him to a charming cottage deep in the woods, the House of Happy Children, occupied by the girl, her siblings Manbok (Eun Won-jae) and Jung-soon (Ji-hee Jin), and their unsettlingly cheery parents. The witchery here is embedded in the power of a child's imagination rather than cannibalism, and it finds a new purpose here: preying on adults with a monstrous, unquenchable will to be loved. The culturally specific shocker crouching in this otherwise gentle shiver-thon fertile with rabbit iconography: a finale of children pleading, cajoling, and whining at the camera directly, which goes on many beats longer than expected. Asian parents and wannabe Octomoms might just want to slice open their wrists and offer themselves to the screen to halt the onslaught.

Don't go in the woods: director Pil-Sung Yim's Hansel and Gretel is a shiver-inducing twist on the classic tale.

Catherine Breillat's Bluebeard studies the original tale with a more dispassionate, though no less entertaining, eye. She runs it through a postmodernist's prism by coolly drawing from period artwork, utilizing an archly detached acting style and distancing devices like recycled footage, and framing it all as an imminently malleable yet still dangerous narrative retold by a pair of somewhat-modern-day sisters. A miniature, girlish version of The Last Mistress (2007) stars Asia Argento, as feistily portrayed by Lola Creton, Marie-Catherine is less frightened of her hulking, erudite, and exhausted Bluebeard

(Dominique Thomas) than fascinated by his alien world, his exoticism, and her own fearlessness. More surprising is how we comfortable grow with the deepening romance between the murderous lord and his child bride. In tackling the most pointed fairy tale about violence against women and in the process foregrounding the horror and glory of womanly will, Breillat continues to build on her now less naked, yet no less resonant feminist oeuvre, one that tests the tangled, hazardous constructs of female desire. SFBG

OAKTOWN FUGUE

The stillness inhabiting Bay Area director Frazer Bradshaw's Everything Strange and New is broken periodically by the sounds of familial battle and the bemused, unemotive back-and-forth of a trio of men perplexed by the circumstances they have drifted into. The most dramatic intrusion, though, is instrumental, an occasional frenzied jiggling of horns and strings that seems to signal the internal noise experienced by one of these uneasy men, a carpenter and family man named Wayne (Jerry McDaniel), who is trudging through his middle years in a state of unhappy wonder.

Shot in Oakland, the film uses a series of portrait-like scenes of house exteriors to convey the static emptiness in Wayne's life, which he describes in voiceover monologues, his voice rising and falling just outside the boundaries of monotone. The contrast between these still lifes and the recurring shock of the soundtrack is almost painfully discordant, though the landscape intruded on is far from idyllic. When the camera moves inside one of the houses, the one where Wayne coexists with his wife, Renée (Beth Lisick), and their two sons, it's filled with signs of residence but seems as empty and still and dead as the outside world, as if the family has just retreated from some personal apocalypse. Later the camera trails through a gutted Victorian as Wayne and Renée are heard quarreling, then processing as modeled by some couples' counselor in their past — more emptiness and a sense of unending minor tragedy. Wayne presents a marriage sapped by financial exigencies such as the now-familiar house worth less than their debt.

These signs of trouble are plain enough, but emotionally expressive. Occasionally Bradshaw leans a little heavily on the symbolic, as when we see Wayne as he envisions himself, in the getup of a clown, and when the film runs backward through a trafficked street scene. More problematic, though, is the awkward shift in direction and shape that occurs when the resident stillness is interrupted by something more sharply horrific than the characters' day-to-day suffering. THURS/23

La Mission (Peter Bratt, USA, 2009) A veteran S.F. vato turned responsible — if still muy macho — widower, father, and Muni driver, 46-year-old Che (Benjamin Bratt) isn't the type for mushy displays of sentiment. But it's clear his pride and joy is son Jess (Jeremy Ray Valdez), a straight-A high school grad bound for UCLA. That filial bond, however, sustains some serious damage when Che discovers Jess has a secret life — with a boyfriend, in the Castro, just a few blocks away from their Mission walkup but might as well be light-years away as far as old-school dad is concerned. This Bratt family project (Benjamin's brother Peter writes-directs, his wife Talisa Soto Bratt has a supporting role) has a bit of a predictable TV-movie feel, but its warm heart is very much in the right place, and the affectionate location shooting makes this an ideal SFIFF opening-nighter. (Dennis Harvey) 7 p.m., Castro.

FRI/24

It's Not Me, I Swear! (Philippe Falardeau, Canada, 2008) Ten-year-old Leon Dore (Antoine L'Écuyer) is a Harold without a Maude, forever staging near-fatal "deadly accidents" that by now no one blinks twice at — whether they're expressions of warped humor, cries for attention, or actual (yet invariably failed) suicide attempts). Mom and dad are forever at each others' throats, while their older son pines for a domestic normalcy that ain't happening anytime soon. One day mom simply announces she's splitting for Greece to "start a new life," pointedly without husband and children. This event rachets Leon's misbehaviors — which also encompass theft and vandalism — up a few notches. Set in kitschily-realized late 1960s Quebec suburbia, director Philippe Falardeau's adaptation of two linked novels by Bruno Hébert is a very deft mix of family dysfunction, preadolescent maladjustment (or maybe budding sociopathy), and anarchic comedy. Adoration (Atom Egoyan, Canada/France, 2008) When orphaned teenager Simon (Devon Bostick) writes a paper for French class in which he imagines himself as the son of real-life terrorists, his teacher (Arsinée Khanjian) tacitly encourages its being taken for fact. The resulting firestorm (largely taking place on the Web) raises questions about the boy's actual parents, free speech, religio-political martyrdom, and so forth. This is the first Atom Egoyan feature based on his own original story — as opposed to literary sources or historical incidents — in 15 interim years. While his fame has certainly risen in the interim, some of us haven't liked anything so well since that last one, 1994's Exotica. Adoration recalls such early efforts in the cool intellectual gamesmanship with which characters and technologies are manipulated toward a hidden truth. Yet provocative as it is, there's something overly elaborate and ultimately dissatisfying about his gambits that makes Adoration less than the

Catchy ditties and dino-riffs at SFIFF

By Dennis Harvey

Before there was Barney or Raffi, the answer to the question, "Who is most responsible for songs most likely to make children sing and push their parents to the very brink of sanity?" was most likely "the Sherman brothers." It might have been enough for Robert and Richard Sherman to write "Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious," "It's a Small World," and "Chitty Chitty Bang Bang," each of which when heard once — let alone a zillion times — became instantly imprinted on the DNA of several juvenile generations. But no, they also had to write indelible songs for the Disney's The Jungle Book (1967), various Winnie the Pooh species, Charlotte's Web (1973), and other things you might have escaped only by being born very recently or growing up in rare media isolation.

World premiering at SFIFF this year is The Boys: The Sherman Brothers' Story, a feature documentary about the Shermans made by two of their sons, Gregory and Jeffrey — partly to figure out just why these fraternal composers of so many cheerful songs have barely been on speaking terms in recent decades. The answer is complicated and, unlike most Disney movies (or documentaries about them), there isn't a happy ending. But there are a lot of happy memories in these 100 minutes, with people like Julie Andrews, Hayley Mills, Roy Disney, Dick Van Dyke, and John Williams remembering the Shermans as a joy to work with, if not a joy to one another. The brothers themselves, still alive and variably kicking, cannot quite agree on what came between them. But of course, not agreeing is exactly the thing.

Unless you grew up in pre-Khmer Cambodia (or an ex-pat community), odds are the majority repertoire of L.A.-based Dengue Fever were not your childhood's soundtrack. But the band's six members know that is, really too bad, because Cambodian pop of the 1960s and early '70s just rocked, with its Farfisa organ riffs, psychedelic flourishes, and incessantly catchy hooks. In an inspired stroke, the festival's latest silent film-contemporary music match-up was commissioning Dengue Fever to create a live score for The Lost World, a 1925 superproduction that's a lot more like today's mall-flick fantasias than just about anything else you could find from that era.

Adapted from Sir Conan Doyle's story, it follows a British expedition deep into the Amazon, where one cranky suspected quack scientist claims to have discovered a hidden valley of prehistoric creatures. By gum, he's right. This restored thrill ride, featuring stop-motion dinosaurs, elaborate miniatures, romantic intrigue, a guy in an ape suit and another (alas) in comedy blackface, was an obvious model for 1933's King Kong (Willis O'Brien designed FX on both) and an admitted one for 1993's Jurassic Park (whose sequel, you'll recall, was 1997's The Lost World). After nearly 85 years, it's still at least as entertaining as the latter-day comic-book movies that owe it a colossal debt. SFBG

Tulpan (Sergey Ovortsevov, Kazakhstan/Switzerland/Germany/Russia/Poland, 2008) Possible new genre alert: the docu-comedy. Documenatarian Ovortsevov turns his camera on his native Kazakhstan, and nothing depicted suggests anything Borat might've broadcast. The country's stark, southern steppes form the backdrop for a family of nomads, including married-with-children Samal and Ondas, and Samal's brother Asa, who returns from his Russian naval service longing for his own flock of sheep. Alas, he can't get a flock until he lands a wife — and the only local prospect, Tulpan, rejects him on the basis of his "big ears" (and the small fact that she would like to move out of the sticks, into the city, and maybe even attend college). Traditional ways bump up against more ambitious ones (as when Asa dreams of a satellite dish), just as comedic moments trade screen time with grittier scenarios (including actual footage of a sheep giving birth). The end result is an intimate and somehow totally relatable look at a fascinatingly foreign world. (Cheryl Eddy) 6:15 p.m., PFA. THURSDAY

In the Loop (Armando Iannucci, England, 2009) A typically fumbling remark by U.K. Minister of International Development Simon Foster (Tom Hollander) ignites a media firestorm, as it seems to suggest war is imminent even as both Brit and U.S. governments are downplaying the likelihood of the Iraq invasion they're simultaneously preparing for. Suddenly cast as an important arbiter of global affairs — a role he's perhaps less suited for than playing the Easter Bunny — Simon becomes one chess-piece in a cutthroat game whose participants on both sides of the Atlantic include his own subordinates, the prime minister's rageaholic communications chief, major Pentagon and State Department honchos, crazy constituents, and more. This frenetic comedy of behind-the-scenes backstabbing and its direct influence on the highest-level diplomatic and military policies is scabrously funny in the best tradition of English television, which is (naturally) just where its creators hel from. (Harvey) 9:30 p.m., Sundance Kabuki. Also May 2, 9:30 p.m., Sundance Kabuki.

California Company Town (Lee Anne Schmitt, USA, 2008) This land isn't your land, or my land, and it wasn't made for you and me — such is the insightful and incite-full impression one gets from California Company Town. Schmitt's beautifully photographed, concisely narrated, and ominously structured look at the Golden State and the state of capitalism is labor of love, shot between 2003 and 2008; it's a provocative piece of American history. On a semi-buried level, it's also an extraordinary act of personal filmmaking that subverts various stereotypes of first-person storytelling by women while simultaneously learning from and breaking away from some esteemed directors of the essay film. (Johnny Ray Huston) 8:35 p.m., PFA. Also May 2, 6:45 p.m., Sundance Kabuki; May 4, 3:30 p.m., Sundance Kabuki.

Rudo y Cursi (Carlos Cuarón, Mexico, 2008) A who's-who of Mexican cinema giants have their cleats in soccer yarn Rudo y Cursi: stars Gael García Bernal and Diego Luna, and producers Alfonso Cuarón (whose brother, Carlos, wrote and directed), Alejandro González Iñárritu, and Guillermo del Toro. But while Rudo is entertaining, it's surprisingly lightweight considering the talent involved. Bernal and Luna play Tato and Beto, rural half-brothers discovered by a jovially crooked soccer scout (Guillermo Francella) who gets them gigs playing on Mexico City teams. But athletic achievement seems barely a concern. Of far more importance are Tato's crooning dreams and high-profile romance with a vapid TV star, and Beto's left-behind wife and kids — not to mention his raging gambling addiction. Though the drama boils down to one final game (of course), Rudo is really about the bonds and brawls between brothers, not sports teams. Goal? (Eddy) 6:15 p.m., Sundance Kabuki. Also May 1, 4 p.m., Sundance Kabuki.

D Tour (Jim Granato, USA, 2008) There's been many a band-on-the-brink doc about groups torn apart by substance abuse, or creative differences, or just plain nuttiness (see: 2004's DiG! and Some Kind of Monster, and any number of Behind the Music eps). In D Tour, local indie popsters Rogue Wave face, and are drawn together by, an entirely different brand of crisis: drummer Pat Spurgeon's urgent need for a kidney transplant. Director Granato is given full access to subjects who are very open about their feelings (and, in Spurgeon's case, unpleasant medical procedures). The result is a music- and emotion-filled journey that'll no doubt inspire many to check off the "organ donor" box on their driver's licenses. A sadly ironic, late-act twist involving a different band member will come as no surprise to Rogue Wave followers, but D Tour incorporates the tragedy into its storyline without ever exploiting it. (Eddy) 9 p.m., Sundance Kabuki. The Immaculate Conception of Little Dizzle (Oavid Russo, USA, 2009) Animator Russo's first feature is a (mostly) live-action whimsy about rudderless Oory (Marshall Allman from Prison Break) who gets fired from his white-collar job and lands in the much scruffier employ of Spiffy Jiffy Janitorial Services. Its punky artist-type staff clean a high-rise's offices, including one for a test-marketing trying out "self-warming cookies." When our protagonists develop an addictive liking for these treats, strange things begin to occur — like hallucinations and, eventually, male pregnancies of mystery critters. Depending on mood, this arch quirkfest with an '80s feel (think of all the similar, mildly surreal indie comedies that rode 1984 release Repo Man's coattails) may strike you as delightful or just plain irritating. (Harvey) 11 p.m., Sundance Kabuki. Also May 6, 3:30 p.m., Sundance Kabuki.

Tyson (James Toback, USA, 2008) Director Toback is picking up this year's Kanbar Award for "excellence in screenwriting," but his latest film is a doc scripted largely in the mind of its subject. To call Mike Tyson a polarizing figure is an understatement (and raises the question: Does anyone really like him except Toback, whom he's known for two decades?). Moon (Duncan Jones, England, 2008) The Bay Area's own Sam Rockwell has quietly racked up a slew of memorable performances in variable films — including 2002's Confessions of a Dangerous Mind and 2008's Choke — so the fact that he's pretty much the whole show in this British sci-fi tale is reason enough to see it. A one-man space saga à la Silent Running (1972), it has him as Sam Bell, the lone non-mechanical worker (Kevin Spacey voices his principal robot assistant) on a lunar mining station in the not-too-distant future. He's just about to finish his long, lonely contracted three-year stint and return home to a desperately missed family when strange things begin to occur. First there are hallucinations, then physical disabilities, then finally the impossible — there's company aboard the station. Debuting feature director Duncan Jones orchestrates atmosphere and intrigue, though despite one major game-changing twist his original story seems a little thin in the long run. Nevertheless, Rockwell commands attention throughout as a character whose exhaustion, disorientation, and eventual panic feel alarmingly vivid. (Harvey) 9 p.m., Castro.

The Reckoning (Pamela Yates, USA/Uganda/Congo/Colombia/Netherlands, 2008) Yates' latest documentary chronicles the long-delayed launch and bumpy first years of the International Criminal Court, a Hague-based body founded to prosecute (primarily) war crimes that member nations were unwilling or unable to do so themselves. Its authority is not yet recognized by several nations — including the Big Three of U.S.A., Russia, and China — while prosecutions of various military or political leaders who ordered crimes against civilians are often hampered by political minefields. Nonetheless, the still-struggling court is a beacon of hope for peace and justice around the globe. Yates lays out its work so far as an engrossing series of detective stories investigating instances of mass murder, rape, plunder, etc. in Uganda, the Congo, Darfur, and Colombia. (Harvey) 5:30 p.m., Sundance Kabuki. Also May 5, 6 p.m., PFA; May 6, 6:15 p.m., Sundance Kabuki.

Still Walking (Hirokazu Kore-eda, Japan, 2008) It's no joy for Ryota (Hiroshi Abe) to bring his wife and stepson up from Tokyo on an annual visit to his elderly parents. The occasion is to commemorate the passing of an older brother who's been dead for decades but is still held up as the yardstick by which Ryo will always fall short. Mom (Kiki Kirin) is well intentioned enough, if often insensitively blunt-spoken. But retired dad (Yoshio Harada) is an imperious grump who resents Ryo's not following him into medical practice, disapproves of his marrying a widow, spurns her son from that prior union as less than a "real" grandchild, and is generally kind of a dick. This latest from Hirokazu Kore-eda (2004's Nobody Knows, 1998's After Life) is a quiet seriocomic with lots of discomfiting moments. Yet it's suffused with enough humor, warmth and surprising joy to easily qualify as one of SFIFF's best 2009 picks. (Harvey)

D Anvil! The Story of Anvil Screw you if you compare Anvil to Spinal Tap. Yeah, there are moments of eerie similarity (and Anvil's drummer is named Robb Reiner — how's that for a coincidence?), but this heartfelt doc (first seen locally at last year's San Francisco Jewish REVIEW It's 1979, and disco isn't the only thing that sucks for Long Island teen Scott (Rory Culkin). Bullies at school beat up his skinny 15-year-old ass; girl next door Adrianna (Emma Roberts) likes him, but "like a brother." Housewife mom Brenda (Jill Hennessy), neglected by real estate magnate spouse Mickey (Alec Baldwin), has gone kinda crazy. Buying into the paranoia around deer-tick-carried Lyme disease, she won't let Scott go outside without duct-taping shut all worrisome gaps in his clothing. It's pretty clear to everyone (particularly older son Jim, played by Kieran Culkin — who here seems a rare live wire in the usually underwhelming Culkin acting dynasty) but her that dad is cheating, though for a while no one guesses it's with Adrianna's bitchy mum Melissa (Cynthia Nixon). Melissa has her own problems at home, given that husband Charlie (a strikingly tragicomic Timothy Hutton) really does have Lyme disease, which has turned him from a dynamo into an exhausted, pitiful shell of a man. Yeah, you're thinking, do we really need another dysfunctional-family flashback with the requisite retro pop hits, pot smoking (back when it came dirt cheap), awkward virginity loss, and nostalgically horrible decor? Sure, why not. Lymelife treads no original territory, but its setting and characters are granted more than skin-deep authenticity, and the tangled conflicts in director Derick Martini and cowriting brother Steven Martini's screenplay really do lead somewhere interesting, even important. There are some annoying quirks, but the overall the Martinis nail a savvy balance of comedy and drama. Plus, amid numerous good performances, there's Baldwin giving a smug, surly yet sympathetic one that should be a shoot-in for award consideration if anyone still remembers little Lymelife at year's end. (Dennis Harvey)

Film Festival) doesn't mock. Friends and bandmates since the early 1980s — when Bon Jovi-level success seemed nearly possible — Reiner and vocalist-lead guitarist Steve "Lips" Kudlow have been chasing the rock god dream their entire adult lives, toiling at day jobs and raising families but leaping at every chance to capture glory, be it a poorly planned European tour or an emotional trip back to the recording studio. Even if you scoff at hair bands, it's hard not to get wrapped up in this tale of success, failure, and power chords! And with no less than Lars Ulrich calling Anvil "the real deal," there's no need to, uh, smell the glove. (1:20) Bridge, Shattuck. (Eddy)

Earth James Earl Jones narrates this feature-length version of Planet Earth, just in time for Earth Day. (1:30) Grand Lake, Shattuck.

Fighting Step Up (2006) star Channing Tatum switches from dancing to you-know-what-ing. (1:45) Shattuck.

The Informers This Bret Easton Ellis adaptation, a period piece on privilege and excess run amok in '80s Los Angeles, rides partly on the spookily spot-on poetry of its casting: the smaller parts are peopled by such '80s survivors as Mickey Rourke and Winona Ryder, no strangers to the tabloids, and there's a genuine sadness in this, the final role of Brad Renfro, who died after an accidental overdose last year. Sadly there's little chance of a Heath Ledger-style postmortem Oscar for Renfro. Though he reprises 2001's Bully's drooling angst, portraying a gawky working class wannabe and the closest thing to a moral center in this coldly searing indictment of LA decadence, he's eclipsed by the beautiful, cruel, and pleasure-seeking youth (Jon Foster, Amber Heard, Austin Nichols, and Lou Taylor Pucci as the absurdly interchangeable Malibu Barbie and Kens) and the scarily calcified, oblivious parents (Kim Basinger, Billy Bob Thornton, and Chris Isaak — the latter particularly effective as the alcoholic, womanizing dad who can barely keep his sneer under wraps) that populate this orgy on the precipice of the AIDS epidemic. The chickens, of course, come home to roost in a way that ties Ellis' intertwined tales to the now-bursting Dubya bubble. This chilled ronde of sex, drugs, and synthpop — a Reagan-era embodiment of the Killers' "Somebody Told Me" — will likely repel moralists, read like deeply charred comedy complete with supremely aerodynamic hair to the former '80s kids who had-been-there-done-that, and intrigue cinephiles with its disinterested yet watchful gaze, trained on an LA playing itself. (1:38) Oaks. (Chun)

Is Anybody There? Being a ten-year-old kid living at an old-folks home run by your parents wouldn't be so bad if a retired magician (Michael Caine) was among the residents. (1:34) Albany, Embarcadero, Smith Rafael.
Lost in the Fog A gifted racehorse, his trainer, and his owner (colorful Noe Valley businessman John Aleo) are the subjects of this San Francisco-centric doc. (1:21) Roxie.

Obsessed Stringer Bell and Sasha Fierce: married, with stalkers. (1:48)

The Soloist Played at moments like Beethoven's Ninth — with maximum intensity and a finger on its earthly passions — The Soloist is one of the few movies of and about Los Angeles that attempts and manages to do justice by its real-life subjects: the writer and the one written about, music and journalism. English director Joe Wright (2007's Atonement) accomplishes this in a grand Hollywood style unafraid to pluck at heart stings as well as eager to borrow from '60s British cinema. Los Angeles Times columnist Steve Lopez (Robert Downey Jr.) stumbles on his story by accident, beneath a statue of Beethoven: the homeless violin player Nathaniel Ayers (Jamie Foxx), a onetime Juilliard prodigy felled by mental illness and resplendent in rainbow-hued Afro-fantastist ragbag-finery. Bonding with this stubbornly unbound soloist — Lopez is a commitment-phobic individualist himself — the reporter grows increasingly involved with his subject, trying to fix his problems and get him help, an apartment, and a cello, plunging ever deeper into the world of the down-and-out in downtown LA. The newspaper industry dives into crisis, casting out reporters as Lopez attempts to lure Ayers inside. Working with Susannah Grant's screenplay based Lopez's 2008 book The Soloist: A Lost Dream, an Unlikely Friendship, and the Redemptive Power of Music, Wright does an ace job of conducting this street-level symphony while remaining mindful of the contextual complexity of this friendship, journalism, and homelessness (the director shot on location and hired 5kid Row denizens and members of Lamp Community, an advocacy group that gives apartments to the homeless, to appear in the film). Amid that realistic backdrop — and sparked by one trippily expressive musical interlude that recalls '60s psychedelic cinema — are the crucial performances: Downey fills out the rough edges of Lopez with a fever and drive that feels newsy, whereas Foxx disappears almost completely, seamlessly, into the role of the brilliant artist-madman. (1:49) California, Grand Lake, Orinda, Presidio. (Chun)

State of Play State of Play was co-written by Michael Clayton (2007) scribe Tony Gilroy, so you'd be forgiven for thinking that his new project would continue in the vein of taut bureaucratic yarn-spinning. The film starts with confident strides in the right direction, before slipping on a viscous veneer of Hollywood gloss, yarn flying everywhere. We meet veteran reporter Cal McCaffrey, played by a winking, fattened Russell Crowe, tugging on one end of a real intra-Beltway Gordian knot, while upstart blogger Della Frye (Rachel McAdams) yanks on another. Two transparently "unconnected" murders turn out to be linked, and after some buddy-movie chestbeating about "traditional journalism" vs. "the internet," the pair set about unraveling the mystery. If only the mystery were more interesting. State of Play offers some clever performances and a lot of halls-of-power bluster, but its cloyingly au courant affect and numerous loose ends leave a sour taste. PET OF THE WEEK

Buddy

I am an energetic dog looking for an energetic adopter, preferably someone who is experienced with cattle dogs. I need daily runs and would likely make a great hiking partner. I also love to learn and would benefit from dog training classes to help me learn all of my doggie manners.

When you adopt ADULT DOGS from The San Francisco SPCA, you'll get all the awesome goodies that come with pets from The San Francisco SPCA: a free first medical exam from a local veterinarian, temporary identification tags, and a medical assistance plan. All this and an absolutely fabulous dog. Senior - $80 (+ years), Adult - $180 (6 months to 7 years), Young - $225 (under 6 months). San Francisco residents pay an additional $14 License Fee

I'm A lonely Guy

By Andrea Nemerson
andrea@altsexcolumn.com

Dear Readers:

The letter from "Forty and Frustrated" a few weeks back got a lot of interest and at least one excellent suggestion (go out alone) from a woman who has had success following her own advice. Excellent! I also heard from "F&F's" male counterpart (and no, sorry, I can't match them up), and here's what we're going to do: We're going to read this and figure out what's wrong and come up with a better approach. Together. Here goes:

I'm a 44-year-old guy, single for most of my life. Aside from a 10-year relationship with someone I was not attracted to and got involved with for all the wrong reasons, I've never had a girlfriend. I have had a few flings, though none have lasted more than a month.

In the last year, I've had more than two dozen dates. All but two weren't interested in seeing me again. The most recent split was particularly painful because she seemed to be the closest match for me yet. (She apparently felt otherwise.) It's always the same pattern. There seems to be a strong initial attraction that quickly fades after a couple of weeks. I can't tell you how many times I've been told I'm a nice guy. I'm beginning to think that the few women who are interested enough to want to see me again eventually realize that I don't have much else to offer, and lose interest. For the record, I'm healthy, fit, athletic. I have a life. I'm not aggressive, conceited, or rude. I like to think I'm a reasonably pleasant person to be around. I'm genuinely interested in what my date has to say. What am I doing wrong?

My profile on Match.com has had over 1,500 hits. I have yet to receive a single unsolicited e-mail. I've sent out nearly 500. I've had more than a few women write back, appearing interested, only to never hear from them again. When writing my profile, I made a concerted effort to not come across as pretentious or self-absorbed. I don't have a checklist that's a mile long. I included photos in which I'm smiling and one can clearly see my face. I would be thrilled to receive an e-mail from a woman who was interested enough to take the time to write one. I can't speak for other guys, but having a woman ask me out on a date would be one of the most flattering things that could happen to me. And I've never backed out of a date at the last minute.

OK! The first thing that catches my eye is the admission, from someone who otherwise seems willing to acknowledge his own more saleable qualities, that he has "not much else to offer." Either this is evidence of a self-image badly enough distorted to cripple any attempts to connect meaningfully with women he might be interested in, or it's true.

If true, we had better hope it is fixable. What does it mean to "have something to offer"?

Well, what are those women looking for? They do want somebody solvent (did anyone else read the articles about chimpanzee chicks who have more sex with the chimp dudes who have more antelope meat?) and sane, but beyond that? Fun, yes; compatible sexually and otherwise, yes; but also, assuming he's dating women in their 30s, a husband and kids. If women in their 40s, maybe just the former, but these days you never know. What they all probably want, though, is availability and commitment. If he is not signaling that these are on offer, and not going way too far in the other direction and offering them in his opening e-mail, he'd better get signaling, and fast.

I assume they would also like to know why he's 44, never married, and so little-dated. He's going to have to come up with a good spin on a sad tale. Not a lie, mind you, but a little polish.

Lonely guy, spark it up. Maybe they're not calling back because they fell asleep.

It also occurs to me that he may be — and I hate to say this because I imagine him reading it and I shudder in empathy — boring. True, "nobody wants to date me" is not your most scintillating subject and may not inspire the complainant to dazzling heights of witty word play, but come on. A little joke, some narrative flair, even a pun would help — and I hate puns. Lonely guy, spark it up. Maybe they're not calling back because they fell asleep.

OK readers, your turn. Have at him. Female daters, would you answer his ad? And have you dated (some version of) this guy? What made you stop?

I recently bought both my kids T-shirts that say "When I Grow Up I'm Going To Save The World." (That these were available in the boys' department only is an issue for another column.) I'm already grown up, and frankly, I don't think I'm going to save the world, but hey, let's save this guy.

What would it take to get him a date?

Love,
Andrea
